GRAVE REGISTRATION cards are sorted by Miss Mary E. Hall, 1630 Walnut Blvd., for the Daughters of American Colonists.

Grave Census Takers Trace Area Pioneers

Making a cemetery census of the graves of Ashtabula County pioneers proves interesting work, says Miss Mary E. Hall. She is chairman of the Colonial and Genealogical Committee of the Daughters of the American Colonists.

"One cemetery near Windsor, located in a clearing in the woods, has graves of three Revolutionary War soldiers," Miss Hall said. "One of the soldiers was under the command of Gen. George Washington."

Renewing a project started earlier in the century and stopped, Miss Hall and Mrs. Wesley Daggett, Conneaut, assisted by Miss Geraldine Perry, Miss Henrietta McKinsey and Mrs. A. H. Pontius, are taking census of county cemeteries to trace ancestry and check on early county pioneers.

Miss Hall reports Ashtabula Public Library is now standing over a cemetery. In another county graveyard, the census revealed vealed eight persons in one family died in an epidemic during 1861.

She says many graveyards were once "plots of ground reserved on farms for family burial, but many are lost now. Many of the dead can't be traced because grave markers have deteriorated and the plots grown over. On several farms the old cemeteries were plowed under to give more farm ground. No one seems to care anymore."

Out of between 75 and 80 cemeteries in the county, the committee has completed the census of 37, Miss Hall said. More than 5,000 grave registration cards are on file.

It was pointed out the project is "distinctly a social service with a altruistic objective of preserving for posterity the names and life dates of county pioneers."

Grave Counts Tally Pioneers

The group invites more information concerning old cemeteries.

Emergo Chapter of the DAC plans to contact older residents in each county locality to locate private cemeteries not listed on county maps. It was said many grave-stones have fallen, are covered with sod or are broken. Many graves were never marked, while others have names, but no dates.

"Private cemeteries, in the most part, receive little or no care," Miss Hall said.

Keeper of the file, Miss Hall is listing the cards in alphabetical order by cemeteries and individuals. Five copies of these records are to be sent to state and national officials of the DAC.

The Emergo Chapter will hold its next dinner meeting in Hotel Ashtabula Club Room Monday night.

1. Introduction

The first part of the paper is devoted to the study of the properties of the function $f(x)$ defined by the equation $f(x) = \int_0^x f(t) dt$. It is shown that $f(x)$ is a constant function, and its value is determined by the initial condition $f(0) = 1$. The second part of the paper is devoted to the study of the properties of the function $g(x)$ defined by the equation $g(x) = \int_0^x g(t) dt$. It is shown that $g(x)$ is a constant function, and its value is determined by the initial condition $g(0) = 1$.

The third part of the paper is devoted to the study of the properties of the function $h(x)$ defined by the equation $h(x) = \int_0^x h(t) dt$. It is shown that $h(x)$ is a constant function, and its value is determined by the initial condition $h(0) = 1$. The fourth part of the paper is devoted to the study of the properties of the function $k(x)$ defined by the equation $k(x) = \int_0^x k(t) dt$. It is shown that $k(x)$ is a constant function, and its value is determined by the initial condition $k(0) = 1$. The fifth part of the paper is devoted to the study of the properties of the function $l(x)$ defined by the equation $l(x) = \int_0^x l(t) dt$. It is shown that $l(x)$ is a constant function, and its value is determined by the initial condition $l(0) = 1$.

3. Conclusion

In conclusion, we have shown that the functions $f(x)$, $g(x)$, $h(x)$, $k(x)$, and $l(x)$ are all constant functions, and their values are determined by the initial conditions $f(0) = 1$, $g(0) = 1$, $h(0) = 1$, $k(0) = 1$, and $l(0) = 1$. This result is of interest because it shows that the only solutions to the differential equations $f'(x) = f(x)$, $g'(x) = g(x)$, $h'(x) = h(x)$, $k'(x) = k(x)$, and $l'(x) = l(x)$ are constant functions.

The "new" and "old" methods of determining the degree of acidosis in the blood are compared. The "new" method is the use of the pH of the blood, and the "old" method is the use of the bicarbonate ion concentration. The "new" method is more accurate and more reliable than the "old" method. The "new" method is also more convenient and less expensive than the "old" method. The "new" method is also more specific and more sensitive than the "old" method. The "new" method is also more reproducible and more consistent than the "old" method. The "new" method is also more practical and more useful than the "old" method. GATES CEMETERY

MESOPOTAMIA, OHIO

Gates is an old, old cemetery, way in the back of a home on Rt. 534 south of Mesopotamia. We had to go thru a lane, their garden, cornfield and this old cemetery with iron gate and quite a high stone wall around it and a weird old pine tree standing as sentinel. Much poison ivy, wintergreen plants, and no care shown. The cemetery was willed to the town by an old lady who owned the property on which the cemetery was laid out and none of the people buried there were her relatives, but she wanted someone to be responsible for the upkeep of the cemetery, so she willed it to the town of Mesopotamia altho they did not want it.

NOTES FROM SCHWEINHART FAMILY BIBLE

Printed by A. Paul, 72 Nassau St., N.Y. for the American Bible Society in 1824.

Pasted on inside of front cover are three items. One appears to be a newspaper clipping; the others receipts for quarterly payment of dues in different churches. The news clipping reads: "DIED, on the 10th inst., Peter Schweinhart, Sen., aged 75 years. The funeral will take place Friday at 2 1/2 p.m. at his late residence on Indiana avenue, near Fall Creek. Services by Rev. John G. Smith. Friends of the family are respectfully invited to attend."

The first church dues receipt does not give the name of the church (only a Biblical quotation) and is for the "3rd qr. April 22, 1838." Here Peter's name is spelled "Schwinehart".

The second receipt is for "Peter Swinehart" in the "Methodist Episcopal Church, FOUNDED A.D. 1784" and is for the "fourth quarterly ticket, June 29th, 1844." It is signed by "B. S. Lister, Minister".

Inscribed on Page 1 is "Peter Schweinhart's Bible ---$1.00".

Inscribed on next page is: "Caroline Schweinhart, married October 6th, 1836".

The book is bound in calf --- now badly worn and stained.

Almost every chapter has two marks (a small circle and a check-mark) in pencil beside the Chapter number. These may be the marks of different persons who undertook to read the Bible through and by these marks kept track from day-to-day how far they had progressed.

The Old Testament ends on Page 637. At the bottom of this page there are about two inches of white space which the type does not cover. On this white strip two notations appear, one above the other, thus, "Peter Schweinhart (note spelling) & Sarah Grumbine married 14th June 1814", and, P. S. married to Susan Davis, May 6th, 1827". Susan Davis was my father's mother. I remember that he once told me she was a "Scotch woman from the North of Ireland".

Between the Old and New Testaments are several blank pages and on these appear a considerable number of notes of births, deaths and marriages obviously inscribed by different persons at different times. They read as follows:

"Peter Schweinhart born in Washington County Pennsylvania and in the 26th year of his life united in marriage to Sarah Grumbine a native of the Town of Hanover, York County, Pa. 14th June 1814

"Jerome, first son, was born at Hanover, Pa. 26th March 1815.

"Edmund, 2nd son, was born at Union Town, ??? County, M.D. 27th September 1816.

"Caroline, 1st Daughter and 3 child, was born at Union Town, Fred'k County, M.D. 27th April 1818.

William F. G. Tague, 3rd son and 4th child, was born at Taney-Town Fred'k county M.D. 7th February 1820.

"Sarah Schweinhart, their mother, departed this life 22nd January 1823 and was buried in the Methodist graveyard at Westminster M.D. Fred'k Co. M.D.

"Jerome Schweinhart departed this life on the 28th day January 1849 (Sunday) at 1/2 past 12 o'clock in the night, aged 35 years, 10 months, 2 days and was buried in the Methodist cemetery near Comisorgsville (?).

*Peter Schweinhart Son departed this life the 16th of January 1862 aged 74 years.

*Susan Schweinhart departed this life 2nd day of June 1870, aged 62 years.
Pasted in here is another newspaper clipping which reads:

DIED: SWEINHART. - On Saturday evening, the 27th, at 10 1/4 o'clock, of liver complaint. Mr. William Sweinhart (note that here, for the first time in this chronicle, the 'ch' in the surname is dropped) in his 57th year. Funeral from the residence of his son, corner of Park avenue and Vine street, on Tuesday the 30th at 2 P.M. Relatives and friends cordially invited.

*Peter Schweinhart was united in marriage, 6th May 1827 to Susan Davis a native of Fred'k county Maryland, who was born 17th December 1807.

*Lucretia, 1st child, was born at Baltimore 8th April 1828. (As a child I was told by my dad that his oldest sister Lucretia had once been the head of the English department at Vassar College.)

*Peter (Junior) 2nd child was born at Baltimore M.D. 5th September 1830.

*Thomas, 3rd child, was born at Balt. 12th April 1833. And departed this life 5th December the same year.

*Daughter born 5th December 1834 and died immediately after she was born and was the 4th child. Balt. M.D.

*Margaret Elizabeth was born at Cincinnati, H. County, Ohio, 20th December 1835, 5th child. (Addition inserted many years later reads; *Died 5 a.m. January 29th, 1908.

*John, 6th, was born 23rd July 1838. And departed this life 25th November the same year. Cin. Ohio.

*Joanna, 7th child, was born 22nd March 1840 Cincinnati Hamilton county Ohio.

*Daniel, 8th child, was born 25th September 1844 Cincinnati Hamilton
C. Ohio.

"Andrew, 9th child, was born 26th day 1848 Cincinnati Ohio (This was MY father).

"Thomas Schweinhart born 10th April 1835.

Then, way over on page 888, next page after the end of the NEW Testament, begins another group, some items in which duplicate those already in the group above cited. Items which do not duplicate are:

"Thomas Schweinhart died the 5th day of December 1833. Daughter born 5th December 1834.

"Left Balt 21st May; arrived Cincinnati 11th June 1835".

A newspaper clipping pasted on the last page of the Bible says

Joanna Schweinhart, who was born March 22, 1840, married B. F. Craighead, a Captain in the Union army during the War Between the States and lived in Indianapolis, where she died on April 3, 1913.

Pasted on the inside back cover is another church dues receipt.

This is for the 4th Quarterly Ticket of the same Methodist Episcopal Church (in Baltimore, I believe) and is dated July 21st 1855. The minister now is Rev. J.C. Smith.

TOGETHER WITH THE GENEALOGY

SAILER

The Sailer (or Sailor, Seiler) name is common even today in France, Switzerland and Germany, and in the United States, it is found from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and it has become a geographical term in Va., Md., Pa., Tenn., Ill., Mich., and Iowa.

Its variations are many, - Sayler, Saylor, Sailer, Sailor, Seiler, Seiller, Seyler, Seyller, Seuler, etc.

The Etymology of the name (originally Seiler) is rope-maker, hence an occupation name. The German e = the English a, the German i = the English y; therefore, German Seiler = English Sayler. The termination lor is error.

In Rupp's 30,000 names of German and Swiss emigrants who came to America between 1726 and 1776, there are found 25 pioneers bearing some form of this name. But of the 25 only one carried the name Matthias, and he came from Rotterdam, in the ship "Crown", Michael James, Master, on Aug. 30, 1749. And he proves to be the pioneer ancestor of this pedigree, as the following data will reveal.

In the Pa. Archives, 3rd Series, Vol's. XIV, p. 134, XV, p. 346, 367 and 666, we find Matthias Sailor, farmer, in Phila. Co., Pa. on the tax duplicate for the years 1769, 1780 and 1781. And in Vol. XX, p. 35, 384 and 423, we find him taxed as a land owner (134 acres) in Cumberland Co., Pa., in 1778, 1780 and 1781. (Cumberland Co., Pa. is just north of Washington Co., Md.)

In Pa. Archives, 3rd Series, Vol. XIII, p. 420 and 641, appears Peter Sailor (son of Matthias) land owner, (50 acres), in Chester Co., Pa. on the tax list, year 1781. And in Vol. XIV, p. 53, and Vol. XV, p. 444 (100 acres), Phila. Co., on tax list for years 1769 and 1780. And in Vol. XIX, p. 189 and 295 (200 acres), Northumberland Co., Pa., years 1786 and 1788.

In the 1790 census, for Washington Co., Md., appears Peter Sailer, with a wife, one son and six daughters.

In Pa. Archives, 6th Series, Vol. 1, p. 153, among the Associators and Militia, we find in the muster role of Capt. Elijah Weed's Co. of the 2nd Regt. of Foot, in the service of the U. S. commanded by Col. Benjamin G. Eyre, of the 2nd Class of Phila. Co. Militia, of the State of Pa., City of Phila. Peter Sailer, private, Aug. 10, 1780. This qualifies his female descendants for the order of D. A. R.

In Deed Book A, p. 356, at Hagerstown, Md., on Nov. 24, 1778, Mathias Sailer sold to Geo. Nigh, 100 acres for 300 lbs.

Signed Mathias M. Sailer (Seal)
mark

In Liber B. p. 288, at Hagerstown, Md., Matthias Sailer, yeoman, to his "beloved son John", Tavernkeeper.

In Liber A, of Wills, p. 115, Hagerstown, Md., appears the will of sd. Mathias Saylor, recorded Sept. 10, 1785. (I have the full will- H. S. Loomis). Abstract is:-

1. I leave to my son Peter Saylor 300 acres.
2. I leave to my daughter Catherine Leatherman 50 lbs. species.
3. I leave to my daughter Mary Wilt 100 lbs. species.
4. I leave to my son John Saylor one Eng. Shilling Sterling, as he already has his share of my fortune.
5. I leave to my daughter Magdalena Nigh, one Eng. Shilling
6. I leave to my daughter Mary Elizabeth Harry 100 lbs. species.
7. I leave to my daughter Susanna Harry 100 lbs. species.
8. I leave to my daughter Elizabeth Harry 100 lbs. species.
9. I leave to my wife Magdalena Harry, etc.
(From this we infer he married (2) Magdalena Harry.)
10. I appoint Peter Wagoner and Harry Weigel of Hagerstown executors.

In Liber D of Wills, p. 182, at Hagerstown, Md. appears the Will of Peter Sailer of Washington Co., Md. son of Mathias Saylor

This will is dated Apr. 8, 1834, and recorded Feb. 29, 1836, of which the following is an abstract.

1. My executors to dispose of my 400 acre tract in Fairfield Co., O.
2. To Peter Sailer, my own son, 400 acres where I now dwell.
3. To daughter Susannah, widow of Henry Shanfelt, etc.
4. To my grandchildren, heirs of my daughter Elizabeth, deceased, former wife of Andrew Shanfelt, etc.
5. To daughter Catherine Sailer, etc.
6. To daughter Sarah Wolfesberger, etc.
7. To daughter Magdalena Middlekauff, etc.
8. To daughter Nancy Sailer, etc.
9. To granddaughter Elizabeth Welty, daughter of David Middlekauff and his wife (my daughter) Hannah.
10. I appoint my son Peter Sailer and my son-in-law Daniel Middlekauff, executors. (2)

From these recorded data, it appears that - Matthias Sailer born Germany, abt. 1720; came to America in ship "Crown", embarking at Phila. Pa., Aug. 30, 1749. Lived in Phila. Co. Pa. - tax payer, thence in Cumberland Co., Pa., thence Washington Co., Md. - Farmer. He married (1) _____. He married (2) widow Magdalena Barry. He took the Patriot's Oath of Fidelity and Support in 1778, as is shown on p. 21, name No. 55, of Brumbaugh and Hodge's Revolutionary Records of Md., Part 1, pub. in 1924. This Act qualifies his descendants for membership in the D. A. R. or S. A. R.

Matthus Saylor (notice the spelling) was a member of the first congregation of the Reformed Church at Elizabethtown (now Hagerstown) Md. He died near Hagerstown in 1786, leaving a will, in which are listed 8 children.

SHANAFELT

Of the many sturdy, home-seeking young men who left the German "Fatherland" for the land of Freedom and Opportunity during the 18th Century were two brothers, Frederick and William Shanafelt. From what part of Germany and in what year they came we know not. But once here they settled on Antietam Creek, near Hagerstown, Md. in the beautiful Shenandoah Valley.

Frederick d. in 1783 and in his will mentions his wife Mary, a plantation, 8 children by name, and named his brother William as executor of his will.

And it is this William Shanafelt who is the pioneer progenitor of the Shanafelts of this pedigree. The proof of this is found in the recitals of the records of the following land conveyances, and of the Wills at Hagerstown.

William Shanfelt's name first appears in book of deeds B, p. 270, Washington Co. Md. Dec. 17, 1779m as purchaser of land; again in Book D, p. 754, Apr. 8, 1786, as purchaser of land; again in Book E, p. 481, Aug. 11, 1787, when he purchased 100 acres near Antietam Creek for 450 lbs. And in Book I, p. 268, wherein his name is spelled Shinefelt and Shunefelt, he conveys land to Andrew Shafer and signed his name in German; William Shonefeld (Seal). Again in Deed Book N. p. 17, on May 22, 1799, he conveys land on Antietam Creek - 2 acres for 21 lbs.

In Liber B. of Wills, p. 254, at Hagerstown Md. appears the Will with a Codicil of William Shanafeld. (I have this will in full; it is very long, hence I give only an abstract).

1. To Mary, my beloved wife, 400 lbs. current money, and other personal property.
2. To my oldest son, Jacob, etc.
3. To my son John, etc.

72

4. To my son William, etc.
5. To my son Henry, etc. - 155 acres.
6. To my son Andrew, etc.
7. To my daughter Margaret Leckaron, etc.
8. To my daughter Susan Bowman, etc.
9. To my daughter Catherine Artz, etc.
10. I appoint my son Andrew Shanyfield and my son-in-law Jacob Lecharon executors.

This said will was dated Jan. 20, 1813, and signed in German.

William Shanyfield (Seal)

His son Henry died suddenly, between Jan. 20, 1813, and Mch. 15, 1813, so William made a codicil, leaving to Henry's widow all that he had devised to Henry, and this codicil was dated Mch. 15, 1813.

It seems that Mary was his second wife and not the mother of his children.

William Shanafelt, b. Germany, 1736. (See p. 238, of Md. Records, Colonial and Revolutionary, by C. M. Brumbaugh.) came to America, settled on Antietam Creek, Md., somewhere near Funktown, which is about two mi. south of Hagerstown where he became possessed of a plantation as well as of lands in Bedford Co., Pa., which he willed to his son John. He m. (1) Ann _____ b. in Ger'y. 1746. He m. (2) Mary _____. On the land which he willed to his son Henry were his private graveyards, no doubt William and his wife Ann were buried in one of these yards. They were probably members of the German Reformed Church.

His eight children as named in his will are:

- | | |
|-----------------|--|
| 1. Jacob | b. abt. 1764; m. _____. |
| 2. John | b. abt. 1766; m. Elizabeth _____. May 15, 1800 Susannah Sailer. |
| 3. Henry | b. abt. 1772; m. _____. |
| 4. William | b. abt. 1772; m. Mary Earlywine, Oct. 24, 1801. |

5. Andrew b. abt. 1776; m. Apr. 10, 1801, Elizabeth Sailer
6. Margaret b. abt. 1769; m Jacob Leckaron
7. Susan b. abt. 1771; m _____ Bowman
8. Catherine b. abt. 1774; m _____ Artz

Henry Shanafelt b. abt. 1768, m. by Rev. Jonathan Rahausser, minister of the German Reformed Church, at Hagerstown, Md., May 15, 1800, Susannah, daughter of Peter Sailer, of Hagerstown. He lived on land called Rock Hall, near Funktown, on Antietam Creek. A farmer. He d. suddenly early in 1813. The widow and children continued to live here until about 1833, when the heirs conveyed the farm to Jacob S. Snider as appears in Deed Book 00, p. 84, Hagerstown Records. The deed was recorded Apr. 8, 1833, but it was signed on Apr. 21, 1832. (I have a full copy of this long deed.) The signatures of conveyance are as follows:

(Peter Shanafelt (Seal)
(her (Elizabeth X Shanafelt (Seal)
(mark

(Joseph Walfersborger (Seal)
(her (Susan X Walfersborger (Seal)
mark

(Daniel Housely (Seal)
(her (Elizabeth X Housely (Seal)
(mark

(Henry Shanafelt (Seal)

The tract of land conveyed by these nine signatures is the 155 acres willed to Henry Shanafelt by his father William.

After Apr. 21, 1832, the sons Peter and Henry with their mother moved to Greentown, Stark Co., O., and here she lived and died. She made her will dated Oct. 5, 1850, proved Dec. 4, 1862, and she is buried in Zion Cemetery, 2 1/2 miles S. W. from Greentown, O.

The children of Henry and Susannah Shanafelt as per sd. deed are;

1. Peter b. Feb. 22, 1800, m. (1) May 8, 1822, Elizabeth Funk, b. Sept. 26, 1801, d. Mar. 28, 1863 (2) Eliza Wofike.
2. Sarah b. abt. 1802; m. (1) Jan. 15, 1825, Deitrich Cobaugh. (Records in Cobaugh and Kryder Families) m. (2) 1838, Christian Kryder.
3. Susan b. abt. 1804; m. Jan. 11, 1825, Joseph Walfersberger. (know of no records).
4. Elizabeth b. abt. 1806; m. Mar. 7, 1826, Daniel Housely. (know of no records).
5. Henry b. July 14, 1809, d. Oct. 5, 1868. m. Catherine Funk, b. Oct. 7, 1815, d. Nov. 19, 1882.

Mr. Fred P. Shanafelt

600 12th St., N.W.

Canton, O.

Dear Sir: As per my promise - the above 9 pages will show your line and answer that question "who are you".

I did not transcribe the Deeds and Wills - they are long - will fill 6 or 8 pages more. Should you or someone else want them, that is another matter.

But through the Sailer's the door to the D. A. R. is open.

I am

Respectfully,

E. S. Loomis.

Great Uncle Henry Shanafelt was a man of keen mind and sound judgment. - Sheriff of Stark County about 1850, a strong partisan. One of the joyful events of his life was when John Brough was elected Governor of Ohio over C. L. Valandingham.

Grandfather Peter Shanafelt was of different type. Hunting, trapping, and fishing were his delight, as well as a good part of his livelihood. It is said that at one time he and his friend, Judge Schrantz, owned 52 hound dogs. I heard him say that at one time he tied short fishing lines on shingles and baited the hooks with small frogs and threw them out on the water to catch fish. The next morning he went out to collect his lines and got his fish. But, alas, he had made the lines just a little too long and every frog was sitting on top of his shingle enjoying a ride.

It may be worthy of record that my father (John) and his brother, Henry, married sister, Harriet and Rose Peters; that grandfather, Peter Shanafelt, and his brother Henry, married sisters, Elizabeth and Catherine Funk; also, that their father, Henry, and his brother, Andrew, married sisters, Susannah and Elizabeth Sailer.

That the intimate relations of the Shanafelts, Saylers and the Balls began in Maryland were continued in Ohio, is attested by the facts that Sarah Cobaugh, daughter of Sarah Shanafelt Cobaugh (and great granddaughter of Peter Sailer) married Daniel Sayler of the line of the older Saylers of Maryland and intermarried with the Balls. Allie Sayler, daughter of this marriage, is a lifelong resident of Canton. And that Daniel Cobaugh, son of Sarah Shanafelt Cobaugh, married Louisa Ball, daughter of Ephraim Ball of the line of Maryland Balls; also that Plympton Ball of the same descent married Elizabeth, daughter of Daniel Shanafelt, and that Plympton Ball's sister, Sarah, married Daniel Shanafelt, son of Daniel Shanafelt, i.e., brother and sister married brother and sister.

Line of descent of Andrew, Jacob, David, Daniel and Susanah (Shanafelt) Copenhaver.

All these were cousins, through their father, to Henry and Peter Shanafelt. Fathers of cousins that are cousins through the male line are brothers. Therefore, the Shanafelt who was the father of this family was a brother of Henry, that is, the Henry who was the father of the above Henry and Peter.

The brothers of Henry, as we have seen (family of William, progenitor of all these Shanafelts) were John, William and Andrew. So the task still unfinished to complete this line of descent is to find out which one of the three was the father of this line.

The children of Andrew and Elizabeth (Wise) Shanafelt, were;

Of the children of Daniel Shanafelt, but two, William and Elizabeth, are living (1927). William bought his father's farm near Copley and Sharon Center. Elizabeth (Mrs. Ball) was born near the present site of the B. & O. R.R. Station at Aultman, west of Greentown. Samuel was killed in the Civil War.

Nicholas Shanafelt (1785-1786) enlisted 1776, private in Capt. David Harris's Co. Col. Hand Pa. Regt. At battles of Brandywine, Trenton, Germantown, Monmouth. Placed on pension role of Center County, Pa. where he died. See Lineage Book, Vol. 53, p. 335 in Western Reserve Hist. and genealogical Library, Cleveland, Ohio.

The following writings are not to be considered authentic such as the preceding genealogy by Mr. E. S. Loomis, 1321 4.111th St., Cleveland, Ohio. They are notes and memo, that would serve well to any such expert in continuing the foregoing work.

Fred P. Shanafelt,
600 - 12th St. N.W.
Canton, Ohio

Sept. 30, 1927

It is altogether likely that Henry and Peter Shanafelt (brothers) made more than one trip from Maryland to Ohio and it was on the second trip that their cousins, Andrew, Daniel, Jacob, David and Susanah Shanafelt (Copenhaver) came with them. It is also likely that they stopped for an indefinite time in Fairfield County, Ohio, before coming to Greentown, Stark County, Ohio. Because there their Grandfather, Peter Sailer, owned 400 acres of land. The Stark County party included Henry, Peter, their mother, their sister, Sarah (the Cobaugh family) and their cousins Andrew and Daniel. While the cousins, Jacob, David and Susanah went to Mooresville, Ind., later we find Jacob in St. Louis. About 1886 we learned of a Shanafelt family in the lumber business in Martinsburg, Iowa.

Called on W. Adrian Shanafelt, moving picture operator in Portland, Oregon in 1923. He did not know much family history. Gave me the name of his mother, Mrs. Emma Shanafelt, 822 W. 43 Place, Los Angeles, California, who gave me most of this paragraph. Her husband, Am. Fuller, his brothers, Raymond, Andrew, Thomas, John, Richard and Edward, were sons of John, who was son of William, and she thought William was the son of Andrew, or John was son of Andrew who was son of William, was not sure. If the latter be true it points to William as the progenitor of their branch of the Shanafelts as well as our own. Raymond, on a milk ranch near Bonners Springs, near Kansas City. Am. Fuller was a farmer.

Andrew, Thomas and John were all Baptist ministers. Thomas had written a rather widely known history of the Baptist Church. Only Edward, Richard and John were then (1923) living. Had a pleasant visit with Edward who was a street car conductor. His son, Gerald O., employed on railroad out of Salt Lake City.

The Kansas City Directory in 1920 listed the _____ Shanafelt in the empty of the Kansas City Star.

Otis S. Shanafelt, formerly of Queen City, Illinois, teacher in high school in Seattle, Washington, was out of city on a short vacation, when in 1923 Mrs. Sarah (Shanafelt) Haber of Parsons, Kansas, and I called at his home.

Charles H. Shanafelt mentions Bears Creek instead of Antietam Creek as the location of Stone Mill which figures somewhat in the family history. The stone residence was on water's edge on Antietam Creek.

1925 Mrs. Walter E. McCleary, Akron, Ohio, Tarpon Springs, Fla. and Marysville, Pa., says:

I often heard the story of a Shanafelt in Pennsylvania, was rather a wealthy man, was counting his money (gold) after being paid for cattle. Afterward disappeared for a time and later his body was recovered from a cistern, money had disappeared.

The foregoing sheets were found in the possession of Thomas Shanafelt, Norwood Place, N.W., Canton, Ohio by Mrs. C.C. Waltenbaugh, Researcher, Canton, Ohio.

Note: Mrs. C. C. Waltenbaugh, 1249 11th St. N.W., Canton, Ohio, is a member of Molly Stark Chapter, Daughters of the American Colonists.

THE EARLY HISTORY OF THE SOUTH RIDGE
ASHTABULA COUNTY, OHIO
By Rev. Rufus Clark

Copied from the Conneaut (Ohio) Reporter of 1880. This "Early History of the South Ridge" was later republished in the Jefferson (Ohio) Gazette", but has never been published in book or pamphlet form. A great deal of this history pertains to a settlement known as Farnham, a few miles south of Conneaut on State Route No. 7.

In attempting to furnish your readers with a few sketches of early history in this part of Conneaut township known as South Ridge, your correspondent would not assume that he is sufficiently acquainted with all the circumstances to enable him to give every family its place, or every party its due. So many of the pioneers have removed, or been consigned to the cemetery, that much interesting material, at this date, 1880, being more than 70 years since the first white man slept a night on this ground, has passed beyond our reach.

Thinking, undoubtedly that such fare as they met, and such lives as they lived could never be of any special service to their descendants, and also for want of time to keep a diary, no record has been kept, except the record of memory, and this is much effaced by age and the length of time. With the help of this, however, some things can be identified, and go in as facts to make up our sketches.

Abler pens have written largely of the Borough of Conneaut, noting its origin, thrift and growth into a first class town, and we do not need to particularize here. But that we might the more easily comprehend the situation of our little hamlet, let us imagine ourselves in the dense forest where not a mark of civilization is seen. As early as 1798 the Western Reserve began to be dotted with settlers here and there. Two families were where now is the city of Cleveland, three in Harpersfield, two in Mentor, ten in Youngstown and one in Conneaut.

The one in Conneaut was Thomas Montgomery, and Aaron Wright, a young man who lived at the harbor in the log shanty erected in 1796 by the great surveying party that sailed up Lake Erie, and named "Stow's Castle" after one of the men. But the first house where now is the borough of Conneaut, was built of poles by Aaron Wright in 1799. It stood at the top of the hill, going north from Rathbun's mill, on the south side of Liberty street, the present site of G. W. Cummings' residence. The same year Robert, Levi and John Montgomery came, and in 1800, James, the fifth brother of the Montgomery family. That year there followed Seth Harrington and James Harper with their families, and Daniel Baldwin and James and Nathiel Laughlin, and settled at first near the lake on both sides of the creek.

Samuel Bemis, Nathan and John King arrived in 1799 and settled west of Conneaut on the banks of the creek. The King family were numerous, there being Dr. Nehemiah, Peter, Sr., Peter Jr., Elisha, Howard and John. They were from New Hampshire.

The first settler on what is now the Center Road running south from Conneaut thru Monroe and other towns of the first range, was Seth Thompson. His father, Seth, was of English extraction and in an early day removed to Berkshire, Vt., where he raised a family of five boys and five girls. Their agricultural pursuits led them to look for larger farms and better soil than appeared within their reach in Berkshire.

About this time the state of Ohio was receiving particular attention as possessing unequalled qualities for farming purposes. Here lands were rich, heavily timbered and well watered. Nothing was needed by the strong hand of the farmer to drive back the forests, mellow the soil, cast in the seed and reap the harvest.

Seth Thompson, Jr., the oldest of the children, resolved to see for himself this promising country, and if he was pleased with it, secure a home. He reached Conneaut (then called New Litchfield, after Litchfield, Conn.) May 8, 1808. During the summer he labored for Judge King at $8 a month, who then lived on the Colonel Fifield farm, where two years since (1878) Mr. Olmstead erected his beautiful mansion. Having bought of Uriah Holmes, of Litchfield, Conn., the farm now owned by John Howard, recently purchased of L. B. Skinner, containing 116 acres, at $2.50 per acre. Mr. Thompson took possession in the spring of 1809.

In company with his cousin, Zadoc Thompson, both young men of 21 years, they built a long cabin on the hill near the southwest corner of the orchard which still occupies the ground. Here for two or three years they kept bachelor's hall. Just west of their cabin he sowed the apple seeds which he had brought from Vermont a year before in his vest pocket. From these seeds grew a thriving nursery. During the summer he cleared four or five acres east of his cabin, running along the brow of the hill to the ravine and thence down the hillside, and from their nursery they transplanted apple trees for their orchard.

The orchard, thru the lapse of 65 years, has greatly declined in its productiveness. The first year of its bearing, Mr. Thompson informs us, he gathered all the apples in his hat, took them to his house, and with his family sat down and ate them. Since then it has been of the best and most productive of any in town, yielding from 500 to 1000 bushels per season. The nursery stood for many years and became the source from which many other orchards in the neighborhood took their rise, but has now disappeared. The second summer they cleared ten acres north of the orchard, on the flats or low ground. Thus these two heroes struck the first blows for civilized life in the vicinity of the South Ridge. Their nearest neighbors on the north lived three miles away in what is now Conneaut, the nearest on the east was John Law, three miles away, being in Pennsylvania, east of Bliss' corners, and the nearest on the south west, David Niles, afterwards, J. P., with a family of five sons, Leonard, David, Sanford, Hiram and Jefferson, and two daughters, Clarissa, and her sister who married Elijah Pool, pitching their domiciles on the farm where now resides William Brydle, Sr. They began where all was raw material. Not a tree was cut, not a house was built, a well dug, a road laid out or any of the common comforts of civilized life. They began at zero, not having even what Adam had, a rib as a helpmate. Such hardships now would be regarded as intolerable. But they were living in anticipation, and it was not many years before they reaped the fruits of their toil in sweet participation. Though exposed to the fury of wild beasts and the bite of the serpent, common dangers of that day, they ventured into the thicket where help was too far away to be called, though sickness might overtake, or falling trees disable them.

Their first bed and bedding were made of peeled bark. From the trees they had cut they stripped it, and one piece was laid on the ground to keep them from the damp earth, and another they laid over, to shelter them from the rain and dew. Within a few days they split shingles and peeled bark enough to put on a roof to their shanty. Then they could dispense with their bark sheets and coarse blankets. Day after day their axes tolled with heavy blows on the tall timbers, though no human being was near enough to hear the echoes or respond to their voice. No clock rung out the hour of the day or dinner horn sounded for the welcome meal. The sun, moon and stars measured their time, and their appetites gave notice for the serving of tables.

PART II.

At this time there was no road of any kind in the vicinity of South Ridge. Indian trails were about all the track the pedestrian could discover. When Mr. Thompson took up his abode at this place, such a track was noticeable as leaving the ridge road in East Conneaut a short distance west of the brick school house, now (1880) a new wood structure, running on to a hog-back, in a northwesterly direction, crossing Smoke Run Creek, intersecting the east line of A. J. Cheney's farm, thence in an angling direction across John Howard's farm up just east of his barn, thence west by Alonzo Ward's to Levant M. Horton's, thence northwest by Nehemiah DeMaranville's to William Brydle's, where had settled two or three families.

It probably was along this trail that Rufus S. Reed came on a severe wintry day on a trading expedition with the Indians. Mr. Reed was a merchant in Erie, Pa., and was on his way to the station of old Phillips, a Seneca Indian, in Denmark. He had with him a French pony, and to his saddle was firmly attached a sack of silver money. When chilled on the pony's back he would alight and walk, driving the animal before him. Becoming weary, Mr. Reed took the bridle and tried to remount, when the intelligent animal refused to let him. Again and again he made the attempt, but the little nag as often slid from under him, and did not on any terms come to a reconciliation, but broke away from him and ran off into the woods. Pursuing his lost treasure with eagerness and becoming exhausted, he fortunately encountered Seth Harrington, one of the greatest hunters of those times, on his return from the camp of Phillips. He besought Mr. Harrington to catch his pony or shoot him, so that they could secure his money. By driving the animal to a narrow point of land in a bend of Ashtabula Creek, Mr. Harrington captured him and returned in triumph, the pony and money to their rightful owner.

It is very evident that the early settlers followed Indian trails at first. Along this path to East Conneaut down the creek bank, and through its waters near the paper mill, Mr. Thompson carried on his back, his meal, flour and other provisions, until he could clear enough land to raise them, or until he could inclose lands for keeping a team.

Mr. Thompson soon made arrangements for a housekeeper. In 1811 he married Luna, daughter of Andress Parker, who with his family were living in Pennsylvania. Mr. Parker was from Ireland. Without any unnecessary ceremonies the household goods were conveyed to the log cabin on the hill, and the happy pair addressed themselves with more than ordinary energy to the clearing of lands and getting a start in the world. At first Seth and Zadoc Thompson took up 200 acres of land, but after various sales and exchanges the eastern part was sold to the Parker family, who built their house on the hillside south of the east and west road, about a quarter of a mile east of John Howard's. The indentation of their cellar still remains to show the exact location of their dwelling.

The next settlers who followed Mr. Thompson were Ezekiel and Thomas Olds, but the precise date cannot be given. They had come to Conneaut in 1807 and stopped for a few years in the vicinity of the Brown's, towards Amboy, but about 1811 Ezekiel Olds located where now resides David Pollock, a little north and across the way from South Ridge Cemetery, and his brother Thomas, on the present site of Levant S. Horton's. They were from Canada.

The Wright families, from Massachusetts, Diocletion, Ralph, George, and Sherman, with their father and mother, and Lemuel Jones, a brother-in-law, reached East Conneaut about the middle of October, 1811. It is reported of Diocletion, that he made purchase where now is the city of Cleveland, but on visiting the place he found half a dozen log houses and every family sick with the fever and ague, and he declared that he would not live there. So he returned to Conneaut and bought the farm now owned by A.J. Cheney (1880).

He built on the east end of his lot near Snake Run, while his brothers and Mr. Jones erected their shanties on the banks of that stream. So little did Mr. Wright know of the future growth of that city. He sold his farm, where, within a few years, he would have been with scarcely an effort of his own, independently rich.

The Wright brothers were living on the banks of Snake Run at the time of the British and Indian alarm, Aug. 11, 1812. The two vessels off the harbor were supposed to be British, and Mr. Kezerta, one of the watch, threw down his gun, mounted his horse and ran through the wood screaming at every jump. "The British and Indians are landing and they will kill us all. Turn out and escape to the woods!" The Wright families on Snake Run made their way fording the stream or walking on fallen trees across, meeting underbrush, with children in their arms and budgets in their hands, expecting every moment to hear the yell of the savages, and the crack of their rifles. All gathered at the house of Diocletion Wright, a half or three-quarters of a mile away. But when the true condition of things was learned, all turned the false alarm into the greatest scene of merriment. Captain Dobbins of Erie commanded one of the vessels and on board he had a few families that wished to land at Conneaut. But when he learned of the great fright on shore, he started his course down the lake to Erie Harbor.

In 1813 Ralph and Sherman Wright effected an exchange of farms with Ezekiel Olds, and moved onto the Ridge, the former occupying the house of Mr. Olds, where David Pollock now lives, (1880) and the latter, building a log house south of Alonzo Ward's on the top of the hill at the southwest corner of his orchard. They held their property in company and built their tannery in the ravine about half way between them. For a number of years they carried on a thriving business.

Lemuel Jones in 1814 bought the place where Mrs. Harriett Farnham, widow of Elisha Farnham, Esq., now lives. He built the first saw mill. It stood a few feet in the rear of Farnham's mill. Years later, when lumbering became an object, the mill yard would be stowed full of logs making a year's work for the sawyers. When they had an abundance of water, the mill, with two sets of men was run night and day.

PART III.

The Hicks brothers, David, Joseph, James and Stephen, natives of Vermont, late citizens of Canada, arrived in Conneaut in 1809, and located on lands near the cheese factory in Amboy. They remained about three years, until the beginning of the war of 1812, when having been compelled in Canada to take their oath never to take up arms against Great Britain, they packed their goods and removed to Vermont. Here they remained until the spring of 1814, when all but Stephen, who began the course of medicine, started on their return to Ohio. While stopping a few days at Rochester, N. Y., the British and Indians burned Buffalo. Soon after they reached their place of destination and settled at South Ridge. David Hicks bought land now owned by Asa Shepard, and built his log house about ten rods west of the road. James erected his house about twenty rods north of A. O. Shepard's, just west of the ravine. They began the work of clearing land. Wheat being a staple article, they set themselves to work for a large crop. They girdled and underbrushed 20 acres, and by September of the next year, 1815, they put in the seed. For this they paid $2 per bushel; but at the harvest of 1816, a little more than a year after peace was declared, wheat dropped to a wonderfully low rate, selling slow at 25 cents per bushel. "Thus", they said, "you can see the difference between peace and war." This greatly disappointed them, as they were contemplating an early payment for their lands.

Joseph Hicks built a house near where John Howard lives, but after a few years erected one on the south bank of the creek, a few rods from the point of land that almost over hangs the south end of the south covered bridge, on the east side of the road, the land now owned by Daniel A. Waite.

Phineas Alexander, whose wife was a sister of the Hicks, bought the farm where now is the residence of Shelby Smith. In 1816 Mr. Alexander sold to Luke and Jacob Thayer. They were on their way to Ohio when peace was declared between Britain and the United States. Soon after this Jacob sold his share of the farm to his brother Luke, and bought the estate now owned by his son, Lewis A. Thayer, on a portion of whose land the F. B. Church edifice was built.

Eli Sanford, who farmed an estate of 150 acres by Litchfield pond or lake in Connecticut, contemplating a removal to Ohio, made two journeys here, one in 1812 and the other in 1813 to look at land. He made a purchase of various lots, some in Portage County, amounting to in all some 1500 acres.

He wanted land for his growing family. He arrived in Conneaut July 5, 1814, and moved on his farm across the way from the F. B. Church, where his son, Eber, old and feeble in health, now resides. He paid Uriel Holmes of Litchfield, Conn. $4 per acre because it was supposed to be at the center of the town. Mr. Sanford brought a family of three daughters, Sarah, Roena and Catherine, and four sons, Chester, Henry, Eber and Simeon. Wheeler, Daniel and Harriet were born in Ohio. The family were of Welsh extraction. A log house was all that he had to shelter his family for 12 years. Then he erected the neat and tasty dwelling that now occupies the homestead, Noah Fogg, about this time put up his shanty on the farm of Elbridge Bemis, just south of the enclosures of his front yard, where he remained about two years.

In the spring of 1815 Jacob Williams, son-in-law of the Wrights, bought out James Olds, the present farm of Levant M. Horton, and Mr. Olds purchased Mr. Fogg's the present Bemis place. Mr. Williams brought with him a family of three daughters, Lydia, Elvira and Louise, and four sons, Marshall, Diocletion, Ralph and Harvey; Mary Ann and Edwin R. Being born in Ohio.

John Fox who came to Ohio as a land looker, two years before, moved his goods in the spring of 1814. He brought a family of three daughters, Betsey, Ruth and Mary, and five sons, Lewis, Sinclair, Benjamin, Samuel and Eleazer. They settled on the present site of Daniel M. Fox, son of Samuel, about one and three-fourths miles west of the South Ridge Post Office.

In 1815 Thomas Mastin, Jr. accompanied by his father, Thomas, Sr., and mother, bought of Elijah Wadsworth, 60 acres on the east side of the road, a part of which is now the homestead of Rev. Rufus Clark. His log cabin stood on the school lot recently purchased of Asa Shepard, in front of where now is the new school building. They had one daughter, Cynthia, and an adopted son, Luman A. Strong.

In the autumn of 1814, Seth Thompson returned to Vershire, Vt., the home of his father, reported the good qualities of the soil in Ohio, and the fine opportunities for a young man here, and in the last of winter, with a span of horses and a sleigh, Zebediah Thompson accompanied him on his return. At the salt works in Syracuse, N.Y., they made a purchase of a few barrels of salt, hoping to make a little money out of their sale. They paid $13 a barrel for it, but the war closed before they could bring it into market in Ohio, and they were compelled to sell it for about one-half of what they paid for it. In Ohio during the war it had sold for $40 per barrel, now (1880) it can be bought for $1.16 per barrel.

Zebediah Thompson bought the farm about three-fourths of a mile east of his brother, Seth, where he lived and died; the present property of Prof. H. A. Andrews. Mr. Thompson married Miss Polly Remington, who came to western Pennsylvania about a year before.

A large number of these settlers came to Ohio, near the close of the war, 1812-1814, and remember something of the burning of Buffalo in the spring of 1814. The Hicks families were at Rochester at the time. Miss Polly Remington, who became the wife of Zedediah Thompson, when on the way with her parents, saw some of the smoking ruins as they passed. Eli Sanford, while stopping in Buffalo with his family, heard the landlord tell the story of its burning, the Indians running with their torches to set the fires, and one who was overtaken by an American officer, who with a fearful stroke of his sword cut his head from his body and returned to his company holding up his booty streaming with blood. And John Fox, with his family, passing through Buffalo about six weeks after these malicious incendiaries had effected the conflagration. All remember distinctly that destructive work of the enemy, while on their way to the new state.

Thus was this part of the town so rapidly settled. Within about five years after Mr. Thompson set up his domicile on the hill at the southeast corner of his orchard, all the farms along the Center Road to Farnham's mill, were settled by actual settlers. They were men and women well adapted to their times. They were a people of indomitable courage, and great executive ability. Self-reliant and resolved on making a place for themselves. They wrought with a will, never stopping to think of dead men's shoes or the estates of their fathers. They, with an energy proposed to have a property which their own hands had earned, and homes which their own skill had wrought. The forests gave way before them, fences enclosed their acres, lumber came up from the mills, farm buildings stood up in their yards, the wool and flax came in and the wheels spun, the looms wove and everything started into life.

(In this paper we will give a few adventures of the early comers with the wild animals and reptiles.)

The fauna or wild animals at South Ridge were very numerous. The early settlers were liable to meet with them at any time, and suffer losses by their attacks upon their swine, and other domestic animals. Mr. S. Thompson returning one day through the woods from where now is the Putney neighborhood, and, coming up to a large tree that had fallen, a black bear sprang up on the opposite side, putting its forefeet upon the log and looking him fiercely in the eye, and then turning from him, he made a speedy exit from his sight. At another time Mr. Thompson was traveling over ground where now is Shelby Smith's sugar grove (1880) and surprised two cubs and treed them. But fearing to be present when the mother returned with suspicions that he had disturbed her young, and give him battle as an outraged bear robbed of her whelps, he hastened for his army musket but on his return the game had gone to parts unknown.

Sinclair Fox, Sr., father of Samuel, living on the homestead where now resides Daniel M. Fox, was one night awakened by the fearful squealing of his hogs. Arising in haste, he went north across the road to a swamp where now is Anthony Stoddard's strawberry patch and found a large bear holding one of his hogs in its forelegs, squeezing the breath of life out of him, the squealing becoming fainter and fainter. But with clubs and stones and faithful dogs, they compelled bruin to relinquish its hold and take to the more dense forest. The Foxes gave chase, driving the bear down on the creek bank near Wm. Brydle, Jr.'s, calling the Niles boys to the rescue and pursued him in an easterly direction, crossing the Center Road north of Farnham's mill, running near Wm. Flack's mill, thence into Pennsylvania as far as John Law's farm. Fortunately by the light of the moon, the barking dogs and growling bruin, they could pursue him. At last, nearly exhausted, the bear stopped, the dogs were called off, and they shot at him, when he ran into a swamp and they gave up the chase, supposing he had escaped. But about ten days later, the scent of carrion in the vicinity led to a search, and they found his remains in the swamp with bullet holes through his body. The dogs were so sore and lame from over exertion that they were compelled to help them over the logs on the way home.

Soon after, Diocletian Wright, living on the east part of his farm, now (1880) A. J. Cheney's, was one night alarmed with the squealing, most lustily, of his fattening hog. He ran to learn the cause, when taking in the situation, he made his way to Seth Thompson's for his army musket, resolved to meet bruin with powder and ball. But having no wadding, the ball was rolled into the musket on the powder without any wrapping, hence they had to seek a level with the game, lest the ball would roll out the muzzle. They succeeded in dispatching the black thief, but the hog was so injured that it died.

Lemuel Jones, Esq., after moving on to the Ridge, and for a time living in a log house near where now is Mrs. Blake's tavern, (1880) heard on a certain day one of his shoats tuning up his squealing organs, down on the flats now owned by Frank E. Sanford. Running to the bank he beheld a bear with one of his young hogs in his mouth crossing Connesut Creek. He went to Eli Sanford's for a gun and dog, and pursued him. The dog coming up to him, bruin dropped his prey and gave him chase, running him back to Mr. Jones and the men, then whirling about, the bear ran the other way, and the dog pursuing him. Thus, after two or three exchanges of this sort, he fled, but the pig was found dead where he had been dropped, and the dog returned toward night with his throat bitten through.

When corn was growing on the same flat, Frank E. Sanford's great-grandfather, Eli Sanford, Esq., started up a large bear among the corn, his great dog and a smaller one giving him chase. Running up the creek bank, the black fellow sent many stones rolling down the hill behind him. The small dog snapping at his heels, but the large one went for his throat. They chased him on to lands now owned by B. B. Smith, Esq., and treed him. Mr. Sanford fired upon him, the ball passing through one of bruin's forefeet, and he fell to the ground. While the dogs were grappling with him Mr. Sanford did not dare to shoot lest he should kill the dogs, hence he dispatched him with an axe. Coming to his house about dark in the evening, Mr. Sanford sent his boys with a team to draw the carcass home. Hence, he had a bear skin and bear's meat for his use.

Wolves were a terrible trouble in those early years. Families did not bring to South Ridge dogs large enough to contend with them. Some of our citizens can remember when wolves would gather with horrid yells almost within a stone's throw from their cabins. If their faithful canine attendants were let out of the house to drive them away, often they would have to flee before the drove of wolves under the house or to some secluded place where wolves could not pursue them.

When Eli Sanford came here in 1814, the wolves seemed to have full sway in the place. His bear dog made an inroad among them. One evening, not long after sunset, there was a fearful outcry of wolves near where now is the F. B. Church. This aroused all the canine qualities of Mr. Sanford's dog, and he barked and leaped to be free. He told his son to open the door and let him go. He soon changed the tune of the howling drove, but the yelps of his faithful dog proved too plainly that they had come to close contact. All felt deeply concerned to know how their faithful animal was succeeding with so large a force as a dozen or 15 wolves. But nothing was seen of him until the second day after he left. In the morning the exhausted fellow reached home sore and lame. It was two or three weeks before he entirely recovered. Some time after this, Mr. Sanford started for Kingsville on business, and his dog followed for a short distance when he struck a wolf track and ran off to the northwest and was gone until the next day, returning greatly wearied as he always did after an encounter with wild animals. As the result of such watchful care, the wolves were driven almost wholly from the settlers. Being a watch dog he would not suffer any game to be taken from him by any hand except his master's. Finally he was missing for a time and at last he was found dead with a charge of buck shot in his head.

PART 5.

During the time that people had dog sentinels to stand guard they felt safe in beginning to raise flocks of sheep. But the next year after that dog was killed, the wolves returned to South Ridge as bold and daring as ever. They made damaging work among the sheep. Eli Sanford had 15 killed, Diocletian Wright half of his, and other neighbors lost largely. Usually sheep were herded in their sheepfolds every night. Ralph and Sherman Wright in partnership took of Moses Harmon some ten or a dozen to double in three years. But one night Ralph K. Wright, then a lad of five or six years, was entrusted with the care of the shepp. We went for them as usual and drove them into the fold, when from some cause, probably the blowing wind, the door swung to against the pin, which had been left in the hole for its fastening, holding it about five or six inches open. Ralph K. supposing the door to be closed, went to the house. During the night the family heard a great noise in the fold, when with lantern in hand they made haste to see what the trouble was, and to their sad surprise, the door of the fold was wide open and the sheep gone. One little sickly lamb stood huddled in one corner terribly frightened, which they speedily left and went in search of the sheep.

Nearly all they found scattered over the slashes, with throat bitten, lying dead, yet warm, and one or two still pursued by the wolves which were overtaken and killed before the men could reach them and beat them off. For ten or a dozen years the farmers had to keep watch over their flocks, lest they should be scattered and killed.

At times, wolves would catch and bite and tear the flesh of sheep which they would not succeed in killing. Then with the closest care they might be cured.

The wildcats did little damage. Still they held the children in fear. Major Reuben Sanborn in a later day encountered one on the west part of Mr. Bemus' farm one evening at dusk on his return from the farm owned (1880) by D. W. Hayward. For a moment the cat stood his ground, and the Major was looking for an attack. But he threw his axe at him and he left him at once. The next day the neighbors were enlisted and a great hunt made through the woods, but no trace of the cat could be found.

South of Conneaut Creek in what is now Monroe, two men went in pursuit of a wild cat and chased it into a hollow log. Then by cutting off the other end and holding a bag over the log, with sticks thrust in, the cat was induced to crawl into the bag and they took him home and for a time they kept him in a cage.

Elk and deer were found here but the former, not very plenty. The latter were numerous and did great damage to the growing wheat. Venison was held in high esteem by the settlers. Hunters would kill and dress the deer and hang up its quarters upon saddle, which they could bend over and let it swing up out of reach. Then they wished the meat for use they would return with their temas and get it.

Raccoons did great damage in the corn, and often on an evening's hunt with dogs and guns seven or eight would be taken in a single night. Some of these remain to the present day.

Porcupines and other vermin often destroyed the poultry. Dogs would surprise the porcupines when, for their defense, their quills would stand erect all over them, forming the shape of a large round ball. The dog that dared to bite them filled their mouth with their quills, where they remained to work through their flesh, if not extracted. Soon they learned to come and stand before their masters and have them with pinchers withdrawn.

Serpents were very numerous and some so destructive that they were greatly to be feared. Eber Sanford when a young man drew in a hand carriage his sister Catherine into the slashes, and leaving her sitting in it, went to his work. In a few moments a large black snake caught her eyes, when the girl felt compelled to look at him. Such beautiful eyes she had never seen and she became so charmed that her eyes seemed to be fastened. She did not perceive that the reptile was slowly making towards her and did not think of any danger. Her brother, beholding that something unusual was attracting her attention, found that the stealthy serpent was just ready to make his coils around her. He struck and killed it, but Catherine was maddened to a red heat because her brother had destroyed her delightful charmer. "Oh! such beautiful eyes." she said.

Rattlesnakes were so numerous that the settlers were liable to meet them at every turn. A man living on the site of the tavern stand killed two under his door steps. Their rattles were heard under roots, among logs, in the grain fields, and while men were falling the trees, laying their fences, plowing for crops, hoeing corn, reaping their wheat or traveling on the way. Lemuel Jones, Esq. said he had killed enough to fill a two bushel basket. Any sunshiny day on going out, within half an hour or so they could find them.

Chester Jones and Lemuel Jones on St. Patrick's Day, (17th of March), walked up the creek bank towards where now (1880) is William Frack's saw mill. About half the distance from E. Sanford's house they discovered a rattlesnake lying about two-thirds of its length out of its hole. They dispatched it and then went for tools and help to dig into its den, where they found four more, larger than the first, in all five. At the bottom of the den was a stream of clear, pure water, running as much as could be discharged from a three-quarter inch aperture. In this water lay the skeleton of the largest rattlesnake ever known in these parts. One of the men said he counted 19 rattles. In the water and about the den they found frogs, large and small. Mr. Sanford said there must have been as many as 15. How the two kinds of animals could subsist together is a mystery.

The rattlesnake impresses the beholder with terror the moment he puts his eyes upon him. If irritated he will change his lustre and make ready for battle. They quirl their tails, raise their heads from a foot to 18 inches, and they are prepared to leap.

They never fail to hit when they strike. Mr. Sanford had tested them and he never could dodge their aim. With an old shoe on a stick presented to them, they always hit the object. When they bit, stock would become blind, swell and die. Boys would sometimes try them on their speed, and they would almost equal their swifterfooted Achillers. Hence, they were a terror everywhere.

These are some of the annoyances by the way. But within a few years the country was cleared of them.

PART VI.

The Indians were not very common in South Ridge, still some relics remain to show that they once roamed through the woods and set up their huts there. Whether they were a portion of the Massasauga tribe a remnant of which in an early day dwelt on the site of the borough of Conneaut, or some other unknown, we know not. Seth Thompson found a few wigwams on the southeast part of his land, near the north line of Shelby Smith's farm. Also, places where fires had been kindled, apparently for the purpose of cooking. But no Indians have been known to occupy these grounds since the white man came to take possession. That they often shot with bow and arrow, the numerous arrow heads found, abundantly prove. Sharp stones have been found which were supposed to have been used for skinning their game. Their usual line of travel, east and west was on the north ridge. Several, however, seemed to take delight in keeping up the fur trade after the whites had begun it. When their season for hunting was past, and they wished to bring their furs to market, those in the vicinity of Conneaut Creek filled their canoes and brought their burdens along its waters past Farnham's mill and other points, to the merchants who paid for them in goods and money.

Among the first who tarried for a short time as far south as Conneaut Creek, was a strange object of charity by the name of Moulton and his wife. They lived in a large, hollow buttonwood tree, standing on the flats southeast of Frank E. Sanford's home. Where he came from or to what place he removed is a mystery. None of the settlers could give much account of him more than that he girdled a few trees, raised a little corn, and at one time compelled his wife to carry him across the creek that he might go in pursuit of his cow. Some time later the tree was cut down, sawed off at both ends and boarded up, and then he could at times sit in one end of the log and play his violin while his wife could spin on the little wheel in the other. The cooking was done out of doors by the side of the log. How long he had been here when the settlers arrived we do not know. He seemed uneasy at their presence, apparently unaccustomed to good society, and he left for parts unknown.

Obed Edwards must have come to South Ridge about the time Lemuel Jones settled on the present site of Mrs. Harriett Farnham's residence, as he was in company with Mr. Jones in building the first saw mill, just west of Farnham's mill. He married for his first wife Miss Strong, of Ashtabula, and brought with him two children, Joseph, now of Plymouth and Mrs. Lucy, widow of the late Mr. Carter of Jefferson. He lived alone on the hill just south of the present residence of Henry Frack. Mr. Edwards married for his second wife, Miss Marcia, daughter of Solomon Wright, who came to Ohio with his sons, Diocletian, Ralph and Sherman.

The next year after Seth Thompson returned from Vershire, Vt. bringing his brother, Zebediah, with him, their father, Seth Thompson, Sr., and mother, four daughters, Polly, Sally, Deborah and Hannah, and two other sons, Robert and George, removed. They came in the Spring of 1816, and lived with Seth Jr. Robert and George, a few years later bought land in East Conneaut, on the lake shore, but their father and mother made their home with Seth Thompson, Jr. until their death. Apolos, another brother of Seth's, moved his family about 1818, and bought of Roger Swinner the farm recently sold to David Curtis by Joseph Payne. Apolos built an ell part of a house, which, when he put up the story brick that now stands on the place, was attached to the rear. He cleared his farm, but unfortunately, by undersigning, lost it, went with his wife west, where they both died.

Shubil Abbee and Sarah Sanford were married by Aaron Wright, Esq. in 1817, and settled on the F. E. Sanford place. He built the tavern stand and the house which belongs to Mr. S., and the one now owned by John Howard.

During the Spring of 1817 Nathaniel Brooks, from Strafford, Vt., came to South Ridge, bought the farm on which his son, Edward O. now lives, about one mile west of Howard's Corners, did some work on it and returned to his native state. The following February, 1818, he in company with his brother, William, Theophilus Sanborn, Colonel Fifield and some twelve of fifteen others, drove to Ohio in sleighs.

Feb. 25, 1819, Nathaniel married Miss Mabel, daughter of Peck Clark by his first wife. Theophilus Sanborn worked for Eli Sanford about three years, took his money and bought the Kent farm, a little west of Clark's Corners. He married for his first wife Miss Alethina, daughter of Capt. Hatch. In 1824 he exchanged farms with Thomas Olds, who lived on the present Bemus place, containing one hundred acres.

Earl Pierce, Sr. came into the vicinity of Amboy in about 1811, but did not move onto the farm now owned by his son, Earl, Jr. and grandchildren, until several years afterward.

Alec Clark, of Vt. who during the summers of 1816-17 visited Ohio, as a land looker, went to Cleveland, Rock River through Medina, and returning to Conneaut, made a purchase of three tracts of lands, lots No. 23, 24, and 34, being 829 acres lying in the southeast part of Salem, now Monroe, and moved his family to South Ridge about the middle of May, 1818. He brought two daughters, Mable and Julia, and six sons, Abner B., Albert, Aaron, Alford, Edward P., and a babe, Frederick Kellogg Clark, and brought his goods in an ox wagon, a two-horse and a lumberree. On reaching this place, Mr. Clark exchanged his lands south of Clark's Corners with David and James Hicks, where Asa Shepard and his son O.D. now live, and with Thomas Mastin, Jr. the place lying opposite on the east side of the Center Road, the present home of the Rev. Rufus Clark. Rufus and Merritt were born in Ohio. Mr. Clark was five weeks and two days on his journey. Sept. 1st the babe, Frederick Kellogg Clark, died, aged nearly 1 year, and his remains were buried under the bough of a large tree near the northeast corner of what is now South Ridge Cemetery, but the exact place of his grave cannot now be identified. During the Spring of 1819 Mr. Clark built Seth Thompson's house, the first frame building on the Ridge. In the summer following he put up the wood part of his own house now standing in the rear of the brick, and when it was inclosed and a floor laid, Elder John Blodgett, on the following Sunday preached in it and the same evening went to Benjamin Abbott's about one mile east of Kent's Corners and married one of Mr. Abbott's daughters for his wife.

Mr. Clark, being a mill wright as well as a carpenter, immediately found employment in that work. During the summer of 1820, he built a grist and saw mill for Eli Sanford, on the site where now stands Mr. Frack's saw mill. Mr. Sanford's was the first grist mill built at South Ridge. It was not till some years later when the firm of Lemuel Jones and Ralph Williams built a grist mill where now stands Farnham's. Mr. Clark was employed for a number of years in building mills. He put up one in Ashtabula for Mr. Newell, one in Andover for Mr. Adams, one in Kelloggsville, steam, for Caleb Blodget, and others.

PART VII.

Conneaut did not long bear the name of New Litchfield. Salem came to be the recognized cognomen until the winter of 1832-33, when a petition was circulated among the citizens which was almost universally signed to have it changed to Conneaut. Up to the year 1817 Salem reached as far south as Gifford's Corners, and South Ridge might be supposed to reach some considerable distance into what is now the north part of Monroe, the gore on the lake was about equal to half a township, so that Salem then contained about one township and a half. Five miles square according to the original survey would give sixteen thousand acres for one township. But the gore added about 8,000 more making 24,000. Hence at the organization of Monroe into a township, Salem gave that town 6,400 acres in the two mile strip off the south end.

In these parts settlers began early to pitch their domiciles. Elijah Poole, a young man who was came into the country with David Niles, 1802, and married one of his daughters, raised his shanty about one hundred rods east of where Walker Bennett now lives. It was in the ravine where he set out an orchard. Pardon Spooner raised his cabin on the present site of Mr. Bennett's house, and set out an orchard north of it. Abraham Bennett came in 1816, as a land looker, and traded his property in Connecticut for land north of the creek, and returned to Ct. and sent two of his sons, Isaac and Daniel, to settle here. They swapped lands with Mr. Poole and Mr. Spponer, theformer raising his lot house east of the ravine, about twenty rods east of William Brydle's Jr., while the latter built on the present site, of Austin Armstrong's house. Years later Mr. Spponer exchanged farms with Andrew Thayer and moved on to the farm where Corwin Payne lives. Isaac Bennett moved into the Spooner house where now stands the dwelling of his son, Walter Daniel Bennett raised his habitation on the present site of George A. Ring's residence. This he traded for the farm where George W. McKinley now lives. Next to Mr. Bennett sold to Mr. Judson, father of Hiram Judson, of Conneaut.

But to return to what is now the north part of Salem, we would observe that the settlers appear to have been fortunate in making their advent so nearly at the same time, the largest portion coming in the year 1818. Some preparations were made in the summer of 1817.

As early as 1816 Capt. Rufus Hatch left Chelsea Vt., and came to Meadville, Pa. In the summer of 1816, his son, Harvey came and bought the estate now owned by O. G. Clark, and erected his cabin on the site where Mr. Clark's residence now stands. In the fall Harvey Hatch returned to Chelsea, Vt., married a wife and came back to Meadville, and early in February, 1818, he and his wife joined his father, mother and family, which at this time consisted of two sons, Woodbury and Alpheus, and four daughters, Lucy, Allethina, Lydia and Abigail, and moved to Salem, into the house made ready for them the summer before. At the time of their arrival the nearest neighbor north was Lemuel Jones on the Elisha Farnham place, the present residence of his widow, Mrs. Harriett Farnham, and the nearest south was William Reed, in Pierpont, 7 miles away.

The same month and year, viz. Feb. 1818, Samuel Ely arrived at Diocletian Wright's from Wilbraham, Mass. They had one son, then about one and a half year's old. The family remained at Mr. Wright's for a few weeks till he could raise a log cabin, on the farm where his son, Samuel Edgerton Ely, now lives. He bought one hundred acres. For ten years they dwelt in their log house and then built the two-story building that now occupies the ground. In a two-horse sleigh Mr. Ely brought his family and goods.

Benjamin Abbott, Esq. bought his land across the way from Lyman Brewster, the farm a year since sold by L. Shumway to Mr. Anderson in 1817 and did some work on it but did not move his family until March 1818. He brought one son, Augustus, and six daughters, Anna, who became the wife of Rev. John Blodget, one the wife of Mr. Fifield, one the wife of Rev. Walter Bartlett, one the wife of Mr. Webster, one the wife of Woodbury Hatch, one the wife of Solomon Spaulding, and one the wife of Mr. Chas. Collins.

Feb. 17, 1817, Ezekiel Colby with two daughters and two sons, George aged 14 and John aged 10, from Mass. arrived at Conneaut, and at this time there were only three frame houses where now is the village. The following summer Mr. Colby took of Colonel Fifield the D. C. Allen farm to work on shares, where Mr. Allen's widow now lives. Having contracted of Mr. Fifield for one hundred acres at $5.00 per acre, the present farm of George Colby, and the family moved on to it March, 1818. It was hard work in those days to live on land where not an acre was cleared. All their supplies had to be transported by way of an overland route, and the cost was immense.

For their first barrel of salt Mr. Colby paid $9.00 At the end of the first year he could not make any payment, and went to Mr. Fifield to give up the land. But the Colonel responded in his quaint style: "By the Life, Mr. Colby, you shall have a much longer time." Mr. C. entertained fears about making another trial, but concluded to do it provided he could have five years in which to make his payments. With this arrangement the boys, George and John, undertook the task. They cut one hundred cords of wood at twenty cents per cord. They sold two cows at ten dollars each and thus paid forty dollars. This they did at the end of the first year. They became more fortunate than they expected, for they cancelled the last note about the close of the third year. This gave them a start in the world and they never yet stopped. The closeness of those times gave them lessons which they never forgot.

The Hickers the same year having sold their lands north of the creek, removed south of it. David and James located on the site where now resides Daniel A. Waite. They worked together until the death of David which occurred in 1819. Joseph settled on the Kent farm west of Clark's corners.

Francis Kellogg, from Vt., in 1818 bought the farm on the west corner about half a mile north of Gifford's Corners, where Ezra Kellogg, his son, now farms the estate. Plinny, his brother, resides about a mile west of the homestead on the Brown place.

In the fall of 1818, Stephen Webb and wife and wife's sister, Eliza, afterwards Mrs. Eber Sanford, from Vt. reached the place, and located on the present site of Clement F. Eaton's house. His farm contained 50 acres which he bought of Col. Fifield. Five years later he sold out his betterments to Daniel Hatch and bought 50 acres on the south corner, on which the school house now stands, and which in 1822 he sold to Col. Samuel Eaton.

PART VIII.

Danville Hayward, native of Vermont, and father of William, came into the vicinity of Amboy in 1816, but did not move into Monroe until the fall of 1817 or spring of 1818. He settled east of Kent's Corners on the farm now owned by John Haviland. His brother took the farm west of his, where Mr. Horton now lives.

During the summer of 1818 Solomon Durkee and his son, Solomon Jr. came from Tunbridge, Vt. to Salem and bought of Peck Clark 55 acres at $5 per acre, on the east side of the Center road opposite the residence of O. G. Clark. Mr. Durkee was a soldier in the war of the Revolution, lost his wife on Nov. 17, 1817, and the next spring came to Ohio to arrange for the removal of his family in the fall. His family consisted of four sons, Solomon, Jr., David, William and Alanson A., and two daughters, Betsey and Sylvia. David moved the family in November 1818 with two yoke of oxen on one wagon, driving two cows. They could milk the cows in the morning and put the milk in a churn standing in the forward part of the wagon, and at evening it would be butter and buttermilk.

Rufus Hatch having bought the farm now owned by Luther Kent, (known at the present time as Kent's Corners), 100 acres, moved on to it in the spring of 1820. Having the land surveyed he found it to contain 107 acres. He built the two-story house that now stands there.

Daniel Hatch, brother of Rufus, came with his family in 1822, and in the fall of 1824 bought out Stephen Webb on the opposite corner where Clement F. Eaton now lives. March 4, 1825 Mr. Hatch had a son born, and because it was the day of the inauguration of Hon. John Quincy Adams, he called his child John Quincy Hatch. These two brothers on these two corners of the roads, gave the name to the place as Hatch's Corners. He has filled the offices of Assessor, Constable and Justice of the Peace. Daniel lived here until he went west, about 12 years ago.

Later Woodbury Hatch bought the farm where Lyman Brewster now lives, and sold to Mr. Brewster, that he might return to the homestead of his father, Captain Rufus Hatch, the present home of O.G. Clark, and take care of his father, and mother in their old age. Here he remained until his removal to Yellow Springs, O., near Antioch College.

Colonel Samuel Eaton of Tunbridge, Vt. moved to Meadville, Pa., where with his family he remained a few years, but in the spring of 1822 came to Monroe, and having bought of Stephen Webb the southwest corner 50 acres lying next to the east and west road which divides it from Daniel Hatch's, took up his residence in the block-house built by Mr. Webb near where now stands the two-story house just sold by his son, Samuel Jr. to Mr. Hazen. Mr. Eaton brought a family of four sons, James, David and John, twins, and Samuel, Jr. and one daughter, Eloner, the two older daughters having married before coming. Mr. Eaton in Vermont was Justice of the Peace eight years, also in Monroe, O., six years.

Elisha Spaulding, Sr. of Chelsea, Vt. settled in Monroe on the present farm of Alonzo Ferguson in 1826. He purchased lands of Mr. Peck, of Conneaut. His family consisted of his wife, three sons, Elisha, Sr. Solomon and Josiah, who became a preacher, and three daughters, Cynthia, Abigail and Urana.

So numerous were the newcomers in these few years that nearly all the land in this part of Monroe was taken. And, if we were to stop for a moment to contemplate the ability of these early settlers we should be compelled to say that an abler class of citizens never had the fortune to fall into rank and file with each other than those who came to reside south of Farnham's mill and Conneaut Creek, for about two miles of that territory. They were among the most stirring, enterprising people of New England, the land of steady habits. The Hickes, Elys, Durkees, Hatches, Colbys, Abbots, Datons, Spauldings and Kelloggs. All master men for their place and condition. They knew how to wield the axe, roll the logs, guide the plow, thrust in the sickle, put up the buildings, and meet any emergency of a new country. They had physical force to push on things to final success.

And now, let we, in our abundance, should forget the simplicity of those early times, let us for once enter into one of their dwellings. Here we find the kitchen, dining-hall, sitting room, parlor, bed and dressing rooms all in one apartment. Their chairs are three-legged stools, their sofas two blocks of wood with a board laid across, their cupboards two or three boards lying on wooden pins driven into logs which constituted the wall. Their table a dry goods box, their set of crockery one large, pewter platter set in the middle of the table from which every member with knife and fork helped himself. Their bread plate a loaf passed around, from which each cut his own slice; their goblets and tea set, a gourd passed from one to the other out of which all drank. It was useless and extravagant for each guest to have his own butter plate or wooden trencher, tea cups and saucers. It was out of fashion to be served with a set of china ware. Our fathers and mothers dared to make their own fashions rather than to send to France, and to make their own furniture rather than to employ other hands. Everyone was at liberty to cut out a way of his own and do what was right in his own eyes. The things of prime importance were studied economy, paying for land and getting a start in the world. Instead of the ornamentals they looked for substantials, as the essential parts of life. Always putting their first foot forward, they made things pass with a relish when otherwise they would have hung with a weight. So animated were they with every new object, so brave amid exposures and dangers, that they appeared happier in the wilderness with their scanty means, than now, often with their super abundance.

The early settlers felt ambitious to do exceedingly well for themselves and send back to their eastern friends cheering words of their prosperity. However hard might be their present fare, they were full of the expectation, that in the end, their removal to Ohio would prove a great blessing. The land was full of the raw material, and only the diligent hand of the artisan was needed to bring it out. Nowhere in nature has man found better. Hence, all their letters partook largely of the future. They were living in bright anticipation. True, they had no costly dwellings, but they had all the essentials for building. Their lands were not cleared but they had a goodly number of acres girdled, and they soon would be.

PART IX.

The crops had not come in bountifully, but much seed had been sown, and the soil was productive and they should reap. Their stock did not consist of large numbers, yet they had enough for the present, and Ohio was going to be the great stock raising state. And as for swine, there was an overflowing fullness. And, although in the spring the old and the young needed some care, yet in the autumn whole droves could be turned loose in the woods and be fattened on shack. Acorns, chestnuts, beechnuts and other wild fruits would make their pork. There were no discouragements which were not overbalanced by encouragements. Living in the future they put on a goodly spirit, moved with a nimble step, bore a strong arm for toil, whistled lively airs and sung the music of new born joy. They drew largely on the imagination and sometimes told in a vein of pleasantry, fabulous stories of the "new state". Expressive of the great plenty, the story would run that pork was so ample that pigs were often seen ready cooked, with a knife and fork stuck in their backs, running about not unfrequently meeting the newcomer with the ever welcome words, "appease your appetite."

With a view to appear very thriving in the new country, the writer has heard Mr. Ralph Wright, from time to time, with a playful smile on his countenance, tell the story of his neighbor who assumed to have a very large flock of sheep. Wolves being so plenty, they could not insafely be left out of the fold over night. Hence the driving of them into the enclosure every evening became a part of the choring. A friend from the east called to make a visit and stay for the night. At the usual time of choring the neighbor sent his little boy to herd his flock, when, on his return he inquired if he had taken care of them, to which he replied that he had. The father inquired if they went in readily, and the son replied, "yes sir". But to make it appear to his friend that he had a great many sheep, he pressed his inquiry further by saying, "Are you sure that you got all of them?" "Yes," said the little boy, "I saw them both as they jumped over the bars." The last question disclosed too fully the fact that his flock was very small.

SCHOOLS

Among the characteristics of the pioneer settlers was the one important purpose of giving their children the advantages of a common school education. The obstacles thrown in their way before they left New England, that in the wilderness their families would grow up in ignorance, was to be obviated by actual demonstrations. It was not many years before there were scholars enough in close proximity to each other for one of the best schools.

A site for a school house was obtained, one-half on the southwest corner of the Seth Thompson's farm, and the other half on the northwest corner of Luke Thayer's farm, just north of the old stone school house now standing in front of the South Ridge Cemetery. Half of the house was on each man's land. Leases were given to the District which were to continue as long as the land was used for school purposes. But when not used for this purpose the land should revert back to its original owners. During fall of 1816 the citizens put up a log house with chinking of wood and mortar of clay. Within a month the building was completed, and the first school in what is now District No. 9 was taught during the winter of 1816-17. The teacher was one of superior advantages, for those times, Chester Sanford, eldest son of Eli Sanford, Esq. who had received an academic course before he left New England, was employed as perfectly competent for the task. It will be interesting to see the names of a number of scholars:

The children of Seth Thompson, Sr. were George and Hannah; of Eli Sanford, Eber S., Wheeler and Catharine; of Jacob Williams, Marshal, Diocletian, Ralph, Douglass, Lydia and Elvira; of Ralph Wright, Sophia and Ralph K.; of Thomas Mastin, Luman W. Stork, adopted son; of David Hicks, Josiah; of James Hicks, Petsey; of Phineas Alexander, Luther and Stephen; of Noah Fogg, Joseph and Eliza.

Of course a larger number attended, but these are the names of those that can be remembered. One thing that especially attracted the attention during the term, was the wedding of the teacher. He was married Dec. 26, 1816, to Miss Sally, daughter of Jonathan Gilbert, Esq. To give place for these ceremonies school was dismissed for a few days. In the Spring of 1817 Mr. Sanford with his young wife moved onto the place now owned by Stephen Berkeley Buss, about a mile east of the South Ridge post office. In the farm there were 196 acres.

The Summer School for 1817 was taught by Miss Cynthia Mastin, daughter of Thomas J. Later in life she became the second wife of Phineas Alexander. Solomon, son of Lemuel Jones, and Asahel, son of Seth Thompson, Mary and Laura, daughters of Luke Thayer, were among the scholars. The winter school of 1817-18 was taught by Walter Wood, of Kingsville. The summer of 1818 by Miss Betsey Hicks, sister to David, James and Joseph. Later she was married to Daniel Sawtell. The winter of 1818-19 by Jacob Young, from Strafford, Vt. On leaving his school he went to Meadville, Pa. The winter of 1819-20, by Hiram Coffin. He had taught but two or three weeks, when during one night the log school house took fire and burned down. Some of the scholars were on their way to school the next morning before they heard of it. This misfortune closed that term abruptly. The next summer, 1820, Mrs. Samuel Ely taught in a log house that stood on the creek bank in the south part of the cemetery just north of the present residence of Chas. C. Durkee. Mrs. Ely took her son, Edserton 3 years old with her. The scholars in District No. 7 attended there in that poor excuse for a private dwelling. This was the first school taught south of the creek. A log school house was built on the southeast of Kent's Corners.

Immediately after the loss by fire of the log school house, a meeting was called for the purpose of building a frame house to stand on the site of the log one which was burned. A building committee of three was chosen, consisting of Peck Clark, Diocletian Wright and Mabel Abbee, who were to superintend the job. And in order that our readers might have before them the manner of doing business in 1820, in the wilderness of Ohio, we will copy the subscription which we find in the old papers of Mr. Clark, which reads as follows:

"Whereas, Education is the foundation of civil and religious liberty, and without which we cannot be useful members of society; and knowing that it cannot be obtained for ourselves and our children without expense in preparing a place where it may be taught:

Therefore, we, the subscribers mutually agree and promise to furnish such material as shall be wanted to build a school house; and each one is to provide and deliver on the ground, near where the old school house stood such part or parts for the building as shall be set to our names. For this purpose we have chosen a committee to receive the materials and put up the frames and cover the same; the timber for the frame is to be delivered on the grounds by the first of April next; the brick for the chimney as soon as wanted. We calculate to be known by the name of the South Ridge Center District."

"Salem, January 22, 1820."

PART X.

To the foregoing elaborate instrument there was attached the following subscription:

All the square lumber, rafters and sleepers, to the amount of $17.50, Luke Thayer; all the capboards, 1700 feet delivered, to the amount of $3.90, Jacob Williams; all the shingles to the amount of $18, Zebediah Thompson; one hundred studs, ten feet long, 4x4, one thousand feet roof boards, one inch thick, 15 feet long, 1800 feet of floor boards white oak, 1 1/4 in. thick, 12 feet long, to the amount of $26.80, Ralph Wright and Sherman Wright. The brick for the chimney and building the same, and hearth, Seth Thompson, Sr. and Seth Thompson, Jr., to the amount of $18.75, also Ira Parker, $14.50, framing the house and putting on the roof boards, and shingles, $24, Peck Clark; putting on the siding, setting the girt and flue boards about the chimney ready for shingling, $15.00, Diocletian Wright; eight twenty-lighted window frames and window sash, two four-lighted sash over each door and find stuff, $11, Shubel Abbee; making two outside doors and find stuff, (no subscriber); all the sealing boards for the inside to finish the school house, Obed Edwards and Lemuel Jones.

To this for a term or two there was to be added the seating. Slabs with legs inserted served a welcome purpose until the writing desks could be made. A cross legged table and an old splint-bottom kitchen chair completed the furniture for the season. Thus the people of South Ridge had the first framed school building in Ashtabula county.

Among the teachers who supplied this district during 8 or 10 years following, we have the names of Mr. Reynolds, Alva Sanford, Ira Hawkins, Adam Smith, Miss Harriet Bean, Daniel Hatch, Mr. Blakelee, Solomon Spaulding, Alexander Call, William Wright; and Miss Urana Spaulding, later the wife of John Haviland, taught in the summer of 1824, and gave the writer of these sketches his first lessons in the alphabet. Rev. Asa Jacobs was our instructor for a number of winters, also Rev. A. K. Moulton for two or three terms. We remember Miss Lydia, wife of Deacon Crittenden, as one of the lady teachers of those times. Rev. D. E. L. Rollin taught a select school in the church for some years, 1837-40.

Among the many pleasing things of those early schooldays, was corporal punishment that had to be measured out to nearly every scholar. A teacher was thought to be a poor governor indeed, who could not use up handfulls of rods during the winter term. After the boys had been sent into the woods for Drs. Beech and Hickory a few times they learned to be cunning with them. At one time the messenger would hack them in various places so that they would break after one or two strokes. At another time, he would twist the withe and run his pen knife through it, or the switch was cut off and nothing but a club remained, and this the teacher would not use. Next, there would come the time of talking and whispering to get the boys to take off their coats, and when this was gained, the punishment for the wrong was added which, often would be less than the first. One day when the scholars had been sliding down hill in the deep snow drifts during the hour of noon, and the teacher looked on with a great deal of merriment, but immediately after school was called they were all arraigned in the middle of the floor for correction. A severe lecture did not convince the scholars that they had committed any crime, but the girls and all had to take their share of the stripes and be sent to their seats. Among this number were some of the most worthy spirits that ever adorned any country. Some of the girls became the wives of our most wealthy and honored citizens; and the boys are many of the most wise and best of our land. One for two terms served as sheriff of Ashtabula county and for years has served as Justice of the Peace.

In the first schools in Ohio, the teachers were compelled to depend exclusively on parents and guardians for their wages. There was no public money, but certain lands were donated by government, about 60,000 acres, the avails of which could be used when sold. But the people did not like to have them sold until lands should be worth more. A little later the Legislature passed an act to tax parents and guardians about half enough to pay the schooling of their own children. This the teacher could obtain without delay, but for the balance he was to make out his school bill, so many miles per day and so much per scholar, and go the round and collect it.

Many times the patrons would not have any money and he would be compelled to wait years for his pay, and sometimes never get it. Later, and as we have the law at present, the Legislature took the more sensible view of things, viz: that all children were scholars to be educated at her expense. Hence, all taxable property was laid under contribution for this purpose. This at first raised a bitter complaint from old bachelors and maids because they had no children, for as they said, educating other people's children. When they should have families they affirmed they would educate them, but did not like to pay other people's expenses. At length it was seen to be a very reasonable law. It is only two or three years since this law was passed compelling children to attend twelve weeks in each year, between the ages of 8 and 14. Thus the schooling in Ohio has grown to grand and noble attainments.

In the early days of our pioneers, scholars were thought to be well educated for any ordinary business in life, if they were thoroughly trained in the common branches of spelling, reading, writing, geography, grammar and arithmetic. Too often they would omit grammar and geography as not absolutely necessary. Arithmetic was to be the last study to complete their course, as, on leaving school, they would enter immediately into the practical use of figures, and then would forget this most important branch. With these ordinary advantages, some of our citizens have risen to fill offices of trust in our towns, Counties and States. Their own genius has made way for them. All thanks to the fathers and mothers who stood so nobly and wrought so faithfully, for the common school. This district has had four school buildings, one log in 1816, one framed in 1820, one stone in 1851 and the present one, a very fine wooden one in 1878.

PART XI.

The Great Connecticut Land Co., consisting of 53 persons, organized Sept. 5, 1795, that bought nearly all the Western Reserve for the purpose of selling it to settlers, effected their work of surveying it into townships the next year. The surveying party of 52 persons, consisted of five surveyors, one physician, 34 chain men and ax men and a dozen attendants. Under Moses Cleaveland, their leader, they landed at the mouth of Conneaut Creek, July 4, 1796, and after some little delay proceeded south 68 miles to the 41st degree of north latitude where it intersects the west line of Pennsylvania, and began their work at the southeast corner of the Reserve. They ran meridian lines five miles apart parallel with Pennsylvania State line to Lake Erie, and parallel lines of latitude 68 miles west to the Cuyahoga River. , thus cutting the eastern portion of the Western Reserve into townships five miles square. The Indians at this time had not surrendered the lands west of the Cuyahoga to the government, nor did they till 1805, and of course they could not be surveyed until a later date.

But there was no such wholesale surveying of roads. The line of travel to meet the wants of the citizens would depend largely on circumstances. That there should be east and west, and north and south roads to intersect at the center of each township would be reasonable to suppose. When it was practicable it would be a convenience for the inhabitants to live equi-distant from where would naturally be the center of their business. The post office, town hall, churches, shops, factories, etc., would accomodate the people best there. This would undoubtedly be in the minds of those who had in charge the town plot of roads.

The first track of the settlers in Ohio lay much of the way along the beach of the lake, and sometimes the wagons of our fathers ran deep in the sands and its waters. The first regularly surveyed highway was the Ridge Road along Liberty Street in 1893, by Nathan King, first surveyor, and Seth Harrington and Aaron Wright. It was cut open as far as Ashtabula. The next one, styled the "Old Salt Road" because it was cut through for a track over which to draw salt, was started from the harbor in 1804 and ran in a southern irregular direction through several towns of the first range.

But beside Indian trails there are still remaining traces of old brush roads through these parts from east to west. Not long since, Lewis A. Thayer pointed out to us one which was underbrushed from near Bliss' Corners over Thomas Gibson's farm, S. B. Buss' Mr. Thayer's just north of his sugar house, on the present site of the P. B. Church, through Eber Sanford's door yard south of his house, Nehemiah DeMaranville's, and Earl Pierce's to Kinsville.

Another one is clearly to be seen across the farm of Lyman Brewster, in which at present through the woods, young trees have grown. This was called in an early day, "The Old Military Road" over which our brave soldiers in the war of 1812 passed on their way from Pittsburgh to Cleveland. While contemplating the track, in our imagination, we can almost see their footprints, the bristling bayonets, the worn uniform, and hear the playing fife, the beating drum, all moving at the voice of their commander, amid the dangers of the forest, the tomahawk and scalping knife of the Red man, and the fearful prowess of a foreign foe. We see them on their way west to join Gen. Wm. Henry Harrison of Indiana, to protect our western frontier. On tracts of land that have been cleared and cultivated, all traces of these roads have disappeared, and, to serve the wants of the early settlers, new ones have been surveyed and worked through.

Good roads are a mark of civilization, but if they were to stand as such an indication at South Ridge, there could have been at that time no such high civilization here. Not a good road was known in these parts for eight or ten years after the arrival of the settlers. The Center road into Conneaut was surveyed in an early day, but it was not open direct to the town until about 1819.

The great swamp between where is now Stephen Daniels and Daniel E. Sawtell, stretching half a mile east and west, utterly precluded the idea of reaching Conneaut in any shorter distance than either by the angling trail by Snake Run, through East Conneaut, or a westerly route down the ravine between David Pollock's and Alonzo Ward's in a northwesterly direction by Mrs. Tripp, widow of Admiral Tripp, by Mr. Huston's crossing the creek where formerly was Josiah Brown's mill and thence east down the Ridge Road to town.

These were the only ways of travel during those long dreary years. The "Big Swamp" as it was called, was a bed of black muck covered a great part of the year with from a foot to eighteen inches of water, which defied the travel of man or beast. In the times of heavy rains or melting snows of Spring, the water would rise almost high enough to run over the land where now stands the residence of Mrs. Allen, widow of the late Hon D. C. Allen. After weeks of leaching through the sand, and dry weather, it would settle away and the soil could be cultivated. Peck Clark once led a horse through after he came to South Ridge, but he came near foundering in the mire and wished many times that he had not attempted it.

PART XII.

In 1817 Ashtabula county appropriated a little money to be laid out in building a road there, and the job of cutting down the trees was let to Daniel Bigford and Hananiah Brooks, father to James and John. During the Fall, these men made an opening among the hemlocks, elms, maples and beech, so that during the winter the people could see through. The job of building a corduroy road was engaged to Judge Nehemiah King, who employed in the work Zaphna and Theodore Lake, brothers of our townsmen, Hiram and Harry Lake. When dry weather came, with a yoke of oxen, they ventured into the muck to wheel their cut logs in order. Many of them were two feet through, while a few would be less. Still they made the way passable, but it became a terror to man and beast. There was danger of catching horses' feet between the logs, and danger of breaking their wagons while bumping over them. The sound of their rattling could be heard for miles away. In a still evening, many a time the people on the Ridge stood out of doors to listen and make observations.

Years later Judge King and Zaphna Lake arose from the position of road makers to take their seats in the halls of the Ohio Legislature to become the honored law-makers of our state.

During the winter of 1817-18 the young people were invited to an evening party at Shubel Abbee's, and one of the gallant young men wanted a lady from the north side of the Big Swamp; hence at the appointed hour he was at her father's house - not with a horse and buggy - but on foot, and the question was, "shall we make the circuit around by Josiah Brown's or attempt what has never been attempted by a lady, a passage over the logs or fallen trees and run the risk of falling off into the water and mire!". His girl said she could walk the logs of fallen elms and hemlocks and did not care for the knots and brush. They made their way even in the darkness of the night, in safety.

The road north of the swamp led across the creek north of Daniel E. Sawtell's on the Ridge Road between Ellis' furnace and thence east to where is now Mr. Olmsted's.

In the Fall of 1818 where now is the Center road, the timber was cut as far south of the creek and Farnham's mill, as to Kent's Corners, but it was not logged off and stumps taken out until years later. The first bridge at Farnham's was built in 1819. Before this the teams forded the creek upstream and in a circuitous route one hundred rods east, up the banks and across the farms of Daniel A. Waite and S. Edgerton Ely. From Azra Kellogg's through Monroe to Pierpont line, it was not chopped until 1824. To do this, several of the first settlers gave 30 days work with team, and for a few days did not return home, but taking their provisions with them, camped out over night. Among these, two still survive: Eber Sanford and Samuel Eaton. All travelers who wished to go to Andover and the twons south, were compelled to take a course through Kelloggsville, and down the old Turnpike road.

The Plank road was built from Conneaut Harbor to the south part of Williamsfield, 1851-53 by such capitalists as Robert Lyon, Zaphna and Hiram Lake, Milo Osborn, Benjamin Carpenter, Horace Wilder, and many others who put in their shares of $25 each. About thirty thousand dollars was subscribed, but cost them when completed sixty thousand. The high bridge at Farnham's mill, built from bank to bank across the race, flats and creek, with the grading, cost the company seven thousand dollars. The road was one of the greatest possible public benefits in these parts. It opened the market for lumber at the very doors of the southern towns and the people improved it with a relish.

Often from 80 to 150 loads have been counted passing South Ridge on the way to market, in a single day. And during the hot season teams would be going all night. Loads of lumber would be laid out as broad and high as heavy loads of hay. All who had timber land everywhere reapt a rich reward. To the proprietors for the first two or three years it brought a revenue that could be divided among them, but as soon as repairs were needed, it required all the income to pay expenses and on the whole, financially, it was a loss. But a never-to-be-forgotten blessing has fallen on the public, as the result of their self-sacrificing enterprise.

We have four east and west roads, one at the four corners at ~~Azra Kellogg's~~ John Howard's, one at the Post Office, one at Kent's Corners, and one at Azra Kellogg's. At the present time no portion of our country has better roads than are found at and about the South Ridge, especially in the dry season, when they are as hard as a floor (1880).

The want of good roads was one of the grandest obstacles in the way of settling a new country. For the distance of 500 miles, our pioneer fathers and mothers met this trouble at every step. And when at the end of 400 they reached in their journey the noted "Four Mile Woods" of Cattaraugus Swamp, they felt that bad had come to worse. The women, beholding the mud and mire axle deep, and the teams struggling and the wagons sinking, turned pale with horror. Sometimes night overtook them even in the midst of this terror of roads.

The Wright families, the aged father and his sons, Diocletian, Ralph, George, Sherman and Lemuel Jones and their families, were in this hell of roads when a cloudy, dark night closed in on them. Two or three of the men mounted their horses and went through the swamp, to return in the morning. But the larger number stayed with their families and goods, built a fire to keep the wolves away, which were already beginning to howl. Their last candle had burned out and there could be no light in the wagons. The children cried for drink, and they could hear running water, but away from the fire, not a hand, tree or bush could they see. Sherman, accompanied by one other of their number, with jug in hand followed the sound, found the stream and filled the jug and returned. But their suspicions were so thoroughly aroused lest there might be insects or reptiles in the water that they durst not drink. However, at the break of day, the morning meal was taken and they went on their way.

Several years later, 1818, when the Clark families came, Peck and William Fowler Clark, his nephew, the Cattaraugus Swamp was still the slough of despair. Mrs. Wm. Fowler Clark, who would sometimes utter her honest convictions even though her friends could hear, exclaimed with great sensation, "The farther we go the greater fools we see the men are for taking their families off so far into the woods."

After reaching South Ridge Mr. Clark attempted to find his way on to his land where now is Clark's Corners. Crossing the creek near the site of Farnham's mill he had made an effort, with his family of six children and two loads of goods, to drive his team up the hill on the south bank, but could not. His next course was to cut his road east. When near Wm. Frank's mill he broke one of his wagons, and went for an auger to make repairs, taking his wife along the ravine with him to Benjamin Abbott's. Mrs. Clark entered the house with tears in her eyes, and mournfully cried out: "Where in the world are these men taking me?" and throwing her sunbonnet under the loom, she sat down and wept most bitterly. With an attempt at comforting words Mrs. Abbott replied: "They are taking you where all the rest of us have been taken, off into the woods." Late at night Mr. Clark drove his teams up to Mr. Abbott's where he found all the comforts for his family and teams that the situation afforded. He settled at Clark's Corners, the place now called after his name, where he lived and died. He was a carpenter and mill-wright.

Those of us who live today beholding our town checked so beautifully with the lines of the highway, accomodating every family at its own door, realize very little what wisdom and labor they have cost. To our careless minds, the marks on the boy's checker board might excite more wonder. But it has worn out one generation to get things ready for the next one to live. Our fathers and mothers have nobly served their country and left these public benefits to be used by all succeeding generations, and it becomes us to prove the worthy descendants of such a worthy ancestry.

PART XIII.

Since the last installment went to the printer, we have learned of another brush road which deserves notice in these sketches. (1880).

It was one from the Wilder Wharf to Kinsman, a distance of about 50 miles due south. The wharf was a pier built into Lake Erie at sufficient depth of water for yawls to land and take on freight, and was located about one and one-fourth miles west of Conneaut Harbor, directly north of the Colonel Fifield place, the present residence of Mr. Olmstead. The track ran up by Josiah Brown's, fording the creek, thence in a southerly direction to David Niles', now William Brydle's, winding round the creek hills, crossing, and up the ravine just west of Walker S. Bennett's, by George A. Ring's, then across Paden Creek, a tributary to Conneaut, and over Mr. Hardy's land west of Ebenezer Wetmore's to Kelloggsville.

Some of the first trips over this trail was made by three men with three yoke of oxen and one wagon, at times one yoke going before to haul away the logs and brush, and the other two to draw the load. The third day they could reach the Wilder Landing. All they could carry was three barrels of salt, requiring a week to make the trip, and camping out every night. The hills and banks were very steep and rugged, requiring the strength of all the teams to ascend. Such a task to obtain one small article of domestic use, cost more of an effort than it would now to go to California for it.

RELIGIOUS MEETINGS.

In these early days of religious meetings they were held in high esteem. All attended even when they were conducted by laymen, exhorters or elders, and their private dwellings were open for any such gatherings. Social meetings were made interesting without ministers. Rev. Joseph Badger, missionary from Massachusetts, was probably one of the first to preach at South Ridge.

In October, 1816, Avery Moulton, from Canada, father of our townsman, Alonzo Moulton, arrived to preach at various places. We have accounts of his holding services at the dwellings of Eli Sanford, James Hicks, Samuel Bemus, Dr. John Venen. Henry Smith and Capt. Steel. In the spring of 1817 Mr. Moulton returned to Canada with a purpose to remove his family to Conneaut, but was overtaken by sickness and died. This delayed the coming of the family till a year later. As soon as school houses were erected, by common consent they were used for public worship. The Peter King school house that stood at the forks of the Gore Road between Conneaut and Amboy was one of the places of common resort.

In 1817, Rev. John Cheney held meetings at South Ridge and other places in town, and continued his labors in these parts for some years. May 23, 1818, he organized the Christian Church at Peter King School house, consisting of fifteen members.

Rev. Mr. Pive, who came into Monroe with Francis Kellogg, held meetings sometimes for a single week. Rev. John Blodgett came from York State the same year, 1818, and preached in the neighborhood south of the creek at various points. About the middle of November, Peck Clark having inclosed his new frame house, Mr. Blodgett preached in it. He continued his labors at intervals, for four or five years. Among those he baptised were Mrs. Diocletian Wright and Mrs. Captain Hatch. In the organization of the Congregational Church at Conneaut, 1819, at the house of Robert Montgomery, Stephen Webb and Mrs. Sarah, wife of Eli Sanford, Esq. of South Ridge, became members.

In 1821 Rev. Jesse Viets, from Vermont, having started for Sandusky, through an accident that happened while driving up a hill, decided to stop at Conneaut. He settled in Amboy and occasionally held service at South Ridge.

Almost from the commencement of the settlement meetings of worship were held, and a tender spirit seemed to prevail. In 1821-22 revival meetings began to be held by Revs. Morrison and Blodgett. James Hicks was one of the converts, and in the night went to tell his brother David's family of his great change. Some of the more cautious entertained great fears that too many were giving away to excitement without proper convictions and they refused to attend lest they should "bid them God speed." But their fears gradually declined and they came to have a more favorable opinion of the work.

The early settlers would go 5 or 6 miles through woody groves, to attend these meetings, and return, making the trip of ten or twelve miles. A little later they took to their horses and went on horseback. Women became almost as expert horse riders as men, and they journeyed from one town to another.

The camp meeting held in Amboy August, 1824, made a deep impression upon the public mind. One subject which was most effective in awakening the hearers and was long remembered, was "The Midnight Cry", the title of a sermon delivered one evening. It fell on the congregation with great power, and many did not immediately yield to their convictions, but a little later became subjects of grace. Soon after this an M. E. Class at South Ridge, of which Nathaniel Brooks and wife, and Jacob Thayer and wife became members, was formed. For some years after Rev. Jesse Viets continued his appointments.

Saturday Dec. 30, 1826, the Free Will Baptist Church was organized at the house of Appollos Thompson, the present part of the brick residence recently purchased by David Curtis of Joseph Payne. The services were conducted by Rev. Samuel Wire. The first members were Jonathan Gilbert, James Hicks, Apollos Thompson, and Judith Barrett, six members. They appointed Mr. Wright as clerk and voted to hold their covenant meetings every fourth Saturday of each month. Rev. Wire became their first pastor, preaching every alternate Sunday. At the second of these meetings there were five added to the Church, viz: Joseph Lillie and wife, Luna Thompson, Lucretia Cheney, and Edith Hayward. In 1830 Rev. D. M. L. Rollin was chosen pastor and he held extra meetings, and crowds of people filled school houses and private dwellings and often large numbers would be on the outside. Baptisms became frequent and their members increased. Sometimes at their monthly meetings the people would attend as at a preaching service, and from 60 to 80 persons would speak.

Jan. 18, 1834, the Church petitioned the Legislature of Ohio for an act of corporation, and on receiving the same the following five trustees were appointed: James Hicks, Apollos Thompson, Silas A. Davis, Joseph Winch and Edward P. Clark. Their annual meetings for electing their successors in office was to be held the first Monday in March.

PART XIV.

During the summer of 1834 the church edifice was erected and inclosed, but it was not until 1840 that the inside was completed. The people were intensely interested in building the church and most of them made great sacrifices. After the great union meeting in Conneaut in 1838, Mr. Day visited South Ridge and preached daily for a week or more, in their unfinished church. September 1842, the Great protracted meeting under the labors of Rev. F.W. Straight and Stephen Bathrick resulted in great accessions. The church received a membership of 150. The church has had 14 pastors, viz: Revs. Samuel Wire, Abram Shearer, D.M.L. Rollin, Stephen Bathrick, F.W. Straight, Rufus Clark, M.B. Kenney, William M. Yates, T.P. Moulton, R. E. Anderson, A.F. Bryant, F.B. Herrick, J.R. Spencer, and L. C. Chase. The longest pastorate was that of Rev. Rufus Clark, having served under four different calls, fifteen years.

The Baptist Church that now worship in their tasty, repaired edifice in Conneaut, was organized in the school house at South Ridge, October 18, 1831, consisting of 23 members as follows: Rev. Asa Jacobs and wife, Isaac Crittenden and wife, Phebe Crittenden, David Taylor, Mary Sawtell, Albert Hibbard, Deborah Benton, Ira Benton, Elmira Benton, Alfred Crittenden, Sarah Ann Jacobs, Sally C. Williams, Lydia Williams, Mary Ann Williams, Louisa Williams, Thirza Wright, Elvira Clark, and Abner R. Clark. Rev. Asa Jacobs, their first pastor served about five and a half years, when Rev. Judah L. Richmond succeeded to the pastorate, and under his labors their place of worship was removed to the Academy in Conneaut. Here until they continued their house of worship was dedicated Feb. 1844.

The Christian Church at Kent Corners, organized Jan. 6, 1825, Rev. A. C. Morrison officiating. A covenant was written to which the charter members subscribed, and for a short time Mr. Morrison served as pastor. On various occasions other ministers visited them and spoke encouragingly to them. Among these were Revs. Levi Hathaway, John Blodgett, Joseph Bailey. During twenty or thirty years Rev. Jesse E. Church was pastor, until he removed to Michigan. Rev. Caleb G. Ward and at times various students of theology from Meadville College supplied them.

Their house of worship was dedicated Feb. 4, 1849. Prof. B.P. Stebbins, of Meadville preached the sermon from Isa. 1:13, Matt. 4:23, and Prof. Huyderhook with Rev. Church and others assisted in the services. They have had good congregations and a good Sunday School, but through deaths and removals they have been greatly reduced, and at present they have no pastor.

Thus, as straightened as were the circumstances of our early settlers, all could take time to attend public worship. Old and young, middle aged and children, could find their way in the forest, along Indian trails or public highways, and at an early hour, be present and waiting for the opening exercises. All felt a relish for these gatherings and truth was received more readily than at present.

The first Sunday School was organized at the South Ridge school house in the Spring of 1824, under the superintendency of Enos Thurber and Miss Spaulding was then teaching in District No. 9, in the house where she was called to teach in the Sunday School. Says a lady, who was a scholar at the time, "the young man heard the recitation of the boys and Miss S. heard the girls." They had no lesson leaves, no library, no papers, no singing books, no black boards, no maps, no lesson helpers of any kind, no book but the New Testament. In the work of Sunday Schools they began at zero, and it was a union with all orders.

In the spring of 1832 a more complete organization was effected, and J. Porter was chosen Superintendent, and Edward P. Clark, a young man about 18, Assistant. They had a full house and a very profitable school. It was conducted as a union meeting until the F.B. Church held worship in their church and the Baptist removed to the village in June 1837.

For the "Origin and History of Sunday Schools in the township of Conneaut," see a discourse delivered at the South Ridge Church

May 7, 1855, by Rev. Rufus Clark, published in the Conneaut Reporter, of which Hon, D. C. Allen was then proprietor. Suffice it, therefore, for us to say in these sketches that the first Sunday School in Conneaut was organized by Rev. Thaddeus Osgood, a S.S. Missionary from Lower Canada. Mr. Osgood began his labors in Montreal, and although strenuously opposed by the Roman Catholics, succeeded in gathering large numbers into his schools. Of his own money he built a school house and employed teachers to instruct all that he should send them.

In the spring of 1820 he came to Conneaut, went from house to house, explained the nature of the enterprise, sought out a young man for a teacher, and the following Sunday gathered about twenty children into Center School house, which stood about three or four rods west of Rev. O. T. Wyman's residence. At that time they did not have Superintendents. It was a single teacher as in a district school that was wanted, and Enos Thurber was the young man called to the work here.

They had no books but the New Testament. From Conneaut Mr. Osgood went to Ashtabula and on to Cleveland, organizing Sunday Schools. The second school house in our town was opened in East Conneaut two or three years later. Hence the one at South Ridge was the third. In 1827 one was organized in the Putney district east, and in 1828 one in the Hunt district, west, taught by Mr. Sperry and wife.

CHURCH MUSIC

Church music has been some of the very best almost from the commencement of the settlement at South Ridge. They have seldom been for a year without a good chorister and teacher of sacred music.

57

The first Sunday after Lemuel Jones and the Wright families arrived in town they were called upon to conduct the singing. It was in a missionary meeting in which probably Rev. Joseph Badger officiated. They were a choir of themselves. With all their musical talent they served in the public worship at South Ridge. Mr. Jones became very popular as a music teacher, and was employed in Ashtabula, Kingsville, Conneaut and other places. During the winter months he gave his whole time to the instruction of singing classes.

PART XV.

Peck Clark had a very fine tenor voice, and was an old singing teacher before he left Connecticut. He, with his family alone could carry all the parts of church music. Mr. Clark had several schools and kept up the choir rehearsals at South Ridge. He told people that singing often did as much to keep up a congregation as preaching. Also that frequently singing was praying. When we used the poet's language:

"Come Holy Spirit, Heavenly Dove,
With all thy quickening power", we sung a prayer for the Holy Spirit to come on the people.

Eber Sanford was a good chorister, and often gathered the singers in rehearsals and occasionally taught a class. When Alfred Crittenden came in 1828, Mr. Clark gradually transferred the leadership to him, making a special request that he should continue in use the better portion of the old tunes, such as Exhortation, China, Majesty, etc. Mr. Lake taught a singing school about the winter of 1838-39. At the next national celebration of the 4th of July, Mr. Lake having charge of the singing, invited a number of the South Ridge choir to join them at the old brick church.

Silas A. Davis became a very excellent teacher of both sacred and secular music, and while he gave himself to teaching, became very popular. He taught at Conneaut, South Ridge, Burg Hill, and other places. Oliver Smith for 20 years preceding his removal to Hilldale, Mich., was a chorister of South Ridge choir, and kept up their rehearsals.

Our Sunday School music has been taught the children since the publication of the "Sabbath School Bell", about 1858. The school was deeply interested in Bradbury's Golden Chain, Golden Shower, Golden Censir, Fresh Laurels, Bright Jewels, etc.

The pastor, Rev. Rufus Clark, assisted by his daughter, Laura, now Treasurer Cook's wife of Jefferson, and others, as organists, gathered the children, Friday at 5 o'clock p.m., for instruction. This was continued for years and drew out some of the best musical talent.

During the summer of 1862 Prof. A. B. Luce, of Kingsville, was employed to give the children a thorough training to sing at the Ashtabula County Sunday School Convention to be held at South Ridge Aug. 27. At this large gathering there were fifty teams with Sunday School workers and children that came from Kingsville. And from Pierpont, Monroe, Kelloggsville, Sheffield, Conneaut, and Amboy there were schools present, riding into Lewis A. Thayer's grove with colors flying. At such a time the spirit of song moved with a power on the little people. At this time Miss Hattie A. Smith, now the wife of S. W. Clark of Kansas, was organist.

MILLS

The first mills were not those that ran by water or by steam. The one of earliest date is described as a rudely constructed machine for pounding grain rather than grinding it. It consisted of a white-oak stump, hollowed and dished out, on which to lay the grain, and a long stone like pestle, to which was tied a rope or strip of slippery-elm bark, hung to a bent-over staddle for a spring pole. When it was thought too great a task to take their grain on their shoulders and travel 18 miles to Elk Creek, Pa. Mr. Niles and his neighbors would grind, or rather pound at this stump mill. They would crack both corn and wheat and make a dish of pudding or loaf of bread that would be quite palatable. Necessity, the mother of invention, has always been successful, but in this case she was not much in advance of the New Testament times, when "two women" did "grinding at the mill".

In a previous paper we stated that Lemuel Jones and Obed Edwards built the first saw mill and this must have been in the year 1817.

During the summer of 1820 Eli Sanford employed Theophilus Sanborn and John Eaton to dig the race way for his mill, which he built the next year, 1821, Peck Clark being employed to do the work. It was located where now is William Frack's mill, and was the first grist mill built at South Ridge. Under the same roof was put in operation a saw-mill, which was the second in this place. The first one in town was Aaron Wright's, built on the site of G. W. Rathbun's in 1808.

During the spring of 1826, Ezekiel Benton and son, Ira Benton, put in both a grist and a saw mill where now is Tinker Hollow. On this mill Peck Clark and son did 80 days work. Not far from this time, perhaps earlier, Jacob Paden, father of Samuel, built a saw and grist mill on Paden Creek, a tributary of the Conneaut Creek, a half mile south of the residence of the late J. W. Shipboy. Later, Joseph Rathbun, Sr. bought it and made improvements. Next Erastus Rathbun came into possession and ran them for several years.

In the fall of 1826, James and John Kennedy built a mill on the site of the Ohio Furnace, near G. V. Eastman's, about 3-4 of a mile north of Clark's Corners. Peck Clark and sons, Abner, Albert and Aaron, did 76 days work on it.

During the year 1826 Obed Edwards sold his share of the Jones & Edwards Mill, to Ralph Williams. Hence the firm became Jones & Williams. The new company made a recasting of their mill fixtures. They tore down their saw-mill and employed Seymour Stevens to put up a two-story frame 40x60 foot, large enough for both a saw and a grist mill under one roof. In 1831, Jones & Williams sold to Elisha Farnham and Thomas Gibson. In 1841 Mr. Gibson sold to Mr. Farnham and he became sole proprietor, and built the mill now owned by his son, P. H. Farnham, one of the best in the county.

After Eli Sanford's death, which occurred April 6, 1827, his mill property, where William Frack is now proprietor, changed ownership many times. His son, Chester Sanford, became his executor. In 1830 Mr. Sanford sold it to Mr. Powers, who came with a family of five sons, Robert, Austin, Thomas, Jesse and Asa.

PART XVI.

Mr. Powers sold to James Hicks, having four sons, James J. DeWitt Clinton, Henry and Asa. In 1838 Mr. Hicks sold to Elisha Judson, having two sons, Hiram and Isaac. In 1840 Mr. Judson sold to his son, Hiram. The same year Mr. Judson sold half of the mill property to Edward P. Clark, and the firm became Judson & Clark. The same year, 1841, Mr. J. sold his half to Mr. Asa Shepard, and the firm became Clark & Shepard. Soon after, Mr. Clark sold his share to Mr. Shirtliff and the firm became Shepard & Shirtliff. Several other changes followed until the property now rests in the hands of William Frack as sole proprietor. During these exchanges of ownership the grist mill was removed and only a saw mill remains.

For their grist mills they had a mill-stone dresser ready at hand in 1815. Jacob Williams followed this business as an artizan. The huge stones about South Ridge in the hands of Mr. Williams were cut into shape and finish, and made to do service for the early settlers. After him, his sons, Diocletian and Ralph followed the business, a very important work in those days.

Seth Thompson built a cider mill in August, 1823, it being the second one put into use in the town of Conneaut. It was erected on the east side of the Center road near the foot of Thompson, now Howard Hill. The present indentation of the earth shows the dug out for the sweep of the horse power. Barrels of cider by the thousand were made here which was used for drink and vinegar.

The first cider mill was put up by Eleazer Peck in September, 1820. It stood at the top of the creek bank on the south side of the Ridge road almost half a mile west of Conneaut, across the way from Mr. Peck's home-stead, now known as the McClintock farm, west of the borough.

Those now in operation are under the charge of A. C. Dibble and Emory Ransom, at Amboy, and O. E. Gifford, at Conneaut.

CARDING MACHINES AND CLOTH DRESSING

These were combined by Ezekiel Benton and son, Ira, in Benton, now Tinker Hollow, in 1823. To raise their saw and grist mill frame, and prepare the machinery, Peck Clark and sons did for them ninety days' work, at an expense of $159.75.

A carding machine was put into the mill of Judson & Clark about 1840, the present site of William Frack.

Another was put into the Farnham and Gibson mill a year or two later.

In these times all families worked up their own wool. Girls who could spin and do their days' work were in great demand every fall to turn the big wheel and twist their rolls of wool into yarn fitted for the loom. Forty knots of filling or thirty of warp was a day's work, and girls of great ambition would be up at morning dawn making their wheels buzz, as if they relished the exercise more than sleep. Often their forty knots would be spun and reeled by 10 or 11 o'clock, and they could have the afternoon for their personal work. Where such spirits held sway in a house the families might as well arise at day break for there could be no more sleep in the house after the wheels began to run, than when a swarm of mosquitoes buzzed in the ear or stung in the face.

A distillery was started in Benton, now Tinker's Hollow, by Benton and son, about the year 1827. This opened a home market for grain, and set the whole country on a stir. Men with teams were sent out into all directions to buy and bring in grain, while another class of teams were employed to haul away the whiskey. In 1831 Conneaut had five distilleries all in full blast. In the gang of teamsters that went out to buy grain, one was made pursor and took charge of the money. To these men, the direction of no small importance was, not to steam up on the way out, but on their return to the distillery they might imbibe with becoming freeness. The result told on too many of them as they could hardly sit on their loads as they drove up to the alcoholic factories.

A bank was instituted by Jacob Paden, father of Samuel, at his place of business, about 3-4 of a mile south of the residence of the late J. W. Shipboy. Mr. Paden issued his script and sent out his bank notes for various kinds of produce and set business on a stir all about him.

Stores of goods were opened for trade in several places. Jacob Paden kept various departments in one: dry goods, groceries, hardware, etc., were trusted out to the new comers with great freeness. No one then thought of paying at the time of purchase. There was to be a running account of debits and credits for a year, and then once for all an annual settlement.

In 1827 Ezekiel Benton and son made an effort to add a stock of goods to their carding machinery, cloth dressing, saw mill and gristmill and distillery in Benton. Their goods were probably purchased in New York, brought on the Erie Canal, which was completed in 1825, and at Buffalo were shipped on board the "Farmer", Christopher Ford's vessel. Capt. Harley Brown, commander in company with the goods of other merchants, I. Flagg of Conneaut, and Judge Moffit of Kingsville, but unfortunately wrecked on Long Point, Oct. 30, 1827, and the goods so badly damaged that they became a dead loss to the purchasers. A lawsuit was instituted against the proprietor of the vessel for damages, but it availed them nothing. In those days says an old resident, "Benton Hollow was almost a village."

In 1834 Major Sanborn built a store across the street from the tavern stand south of the post office and in the autumn, in company with two brothers, John W. and David Haskell, put in a stock of goods. They ran a thriving business for about ten years. In 1845 Mr. Sanborn sold his share to Edwin R. Williams, and the firm became Haskell & Williams. In 1847 they sold to Maj. Reuben Sanborn and Hiram Judson, and the firm became Sanborn & Judson. They dealt largely in lumber, and their trade grew on their hands.

In 1850 Mr. Sanborn sold his share to William H. Cheney, and the firm became Judson & Cheney. In 1854 Mr. Judson sold to Asabel Thompson and the firm became Cheney & Thompson. In 1855 Mr. Cheney bought the whole interest and continued business alone until his death. Since this time Mr. Thompson has been in trade by himself. In the earlier times South Ridge was one of the best points for business, and such men as Hiram Judson of Conneaut, and William Haskell and E.R. Williams of Ashtabula, found employment for their business talent.

PART XVII.

The price of a few articles will show us what reason the pioneer settlers had to complain of hard times. If such a season should return to us, their descendants, we should hear wailings of despair. Compared with them, our talk about hard times are meaningless terms. Now the country is full of bread, and any industrious economizing person can gain a supply. From 1819 to 1824, prices ran as follows: nails, per pound, 25 cents; tea $1; cotton cloth 31 cents per yard; tow cloth, 50 cents per yard; pork, 20 cents per pound; straw $1 a load; hay, $4 a ton; cows $10 a head; horses, $35 and $40; a yoke of oxen, $40 to 45. The year Eber Sanford was married, 1822, he drove to the Wilder wharf and paid $8 for a barrel of salt. About the same time John Hutchins paid sixteen bushels of wheat for a barrel.

Postal charges were at their highest maximum. Twenty-five cents were charged on a single piece of paper, making one-half of the sheet an envelope. If a small piece of paper as large as the hand or a dollar bill was inclosed, the charge was 50¢. This was paid by the person to whom the letter was addressed. If a newspaper, magazine or other publication was wanted and a dollar bill was enclosed, there was a half dollar charged. Sept. 17, 1820, William Fowler Clark of Clark's Corners, had a letter come to him on which there was fifty cents charged and he had to borrow the money to take it from the post office. A little later and only twenty-five cents freight was charged on a barrel of salt. With such postal rates it operated almost as an embargo in correspondence and intelligence. Many of the settlers said they could not afford to write to their friends oftener than once a year. Thus being unaccustomed to write they soon dropped to once in two, five and ten years, and then to dropping correspondence altogether.

Our post-office, which was obtained by the agency of Eber Sanford, Esq., Major Reuben Sanborn, and others, about 1840, and John W. Haskell appointed P.M., was suddenly snatched away from us Nov. 19, 1851.

This morning's mail brought a letter from Hon. Horatio King, assistant Post Master General, addressed to William H. Cheney, P.M. saying that the Post Master General Hon. James Campbell, had removed the office, and that Mr. Cheney was hereby ordered to convey the post office fixtures forthwith to the Conneaut office. For this we knew of no reason unless it was the people were thoroughly Anti-slavery and of course not supporters of that Pro-slavery administration. It could not be removed because of additional expense to the Department from the fact that the mail carrier every day drove past our door, and he had no extra work to do to call and leave the mail. The pastor, Rev. Rufus Clark, immediately addressed a letter to Mr. King asking the reasons for such uncalled for measure, and for the Reestablishment, also letters to Hon. J. R. Gladings, Hon. B.F. Wade, and Hon. Ebenezer Knowlton, member of Congress from Maine, with whom he was acquainted, asking their influence in getting the post office restored to us. The three Congressmen assured us they would do all they could for us. In Senator Wade's quaint style of language he wrote: "We will help you all we can, but you must remember, an Anti-slavery man has no influence in this contemptible administration." Soon word came that we could have the office restored provided we would secure an administration man (Democratic) for Post Master. On looking over our community we found there was only one such man in the place, and it was with us "Hopkins' Choice", or no office. Of course, we accepted the offer and the office was given back to us. But the public feeling arose so strongly against him, the the old Post Master was constituted deputy, and after a short time he had the whole control, carrying on under the new name. The present incumbent, Asahel Thompson, has filled the office since 1860, to the satisfaction of the Department and our citizens.

Those who have served as ppst masters are about as follows: John Haskell, 7 years, from 1840; Hiram Judson, 7 years from 1847; William H. Cheney, 2 years from 1854; A. J. Cheney, 2 years from 1856; Daniel Hill, 2 years from 1858; Asa Shepard ten and a half years from 1860; Asahel Thompson, the present occupant, 9 years from 1871.

INCIDENTS

Among the many good things of olden times there were some things exceedingly ludicrous. One of these happened on a most solemn occasion. Mr. P. K. with several converts, left the Peter King school house to attend to the ordinance of baptism. Gathering at the Conneaute Creek near Bemus' mill, the singing, prayer and arrangement of candidates passed, and the minister was about to lead the candidates into the water. Just at this moment, Mr. P. K.'s brother, who had imbibed too freely of strong drink, straightened up by the side of the administrator, saying: "Sir, what are you going to do with my brother?" "I intend to baptise him", answered the divine. "You are going to put him under the water, then, are you?" "Yes". "Well, I want you to hold him in till you see the last bubble, for he's a confounded rascal".

In the fall of 1815, Seth Thompson found a side-saddle while clearing land for Eli Sanford where now is Eber Sanford's orchard. It was claimed to be a saddle which a woman rode over the Military road a short time before, from Meadville, Pa. through the woods to Cleveland, O. At the place of destination the horse broke away from her, and returning, broke the saddle girdle and lost the saddle at this place.

Conneaut means "fish" and the stream bearing this name was so called by the Indians because of the abundance of fish in its waters. Before any dams were thrown across the stream various schools of fish every spring would run up stream 20 or 30 miles. David Niles used to tell his later neighbors of the sights of cat fish he had seen by his flats. The rock bottom of the Conneaut, he said, would be black with them. One day with his boys he took his canoe, a boat, dug out of a large white-wood log, and began spearing them and loading them into his boat in the route to Bemus' mill, giving directions to a younger son to meet him at that place with a yoke of oxen. On reaching his destination he had his canoe full, and it made a heavy load for his team to take home. Turning his sailing craft into a mud boat he proceeded with cheerful spirits, bearing the precious burden, a supply for himself and neighbors. When dams became common, all such fish had to be caught in the lake or at the mouth of the creek, for they could not go up to distribute themselves as fresh fish for the more distant settlers. Thus nature made provisions for man long before he came to take possession.

PART XVIII.

Caleb Blodgett put on a line of Ohio stages between Conneaut and Kelloggsville about the year 1820 or '21, and at first they ran by Nehemiah DeMaranville's, William Brydle's, through Tinker Hollow and past Urban Hardy's. When the Center road became passable, the coach with four horses ran directly south to Gifford's Corners, and then west to Kelloggsville, making their trip, carrying the mail and passengers, every day. There were seats for nine persons and their baggage on the outside. At that time Kelloggsville was more of a business center than either Conneaut or Ashtabula.

The shower of meteors that fell on the morning of Nov. 13, 1833, was witnessed by some of the citizens of South Ridge. Miss Celia Sanborn, now the wife of Rufus Clark, then a girl of 11 years, while watching with her sick father, beheld this most wonderful instance of falling or shooting stars. History gives account of such phenomena, but no other instance ever began to equal this. The fire balls flew like snow flakes in a driving storm, some of which were very large, describing circles and straight lines, like sky rockets, with the most imposing grandeur. Some were so terrified with the sight that they thought the Judgment Day had come, and cried for mercy.

One thing noticeable in the atmosphere was a change in the weather from warm to cold. The day previous to the meteoric shower was unusually warm for the season, but before the next morning a severe frost ensued, unparallel for the time of year. Shooting stars are usually taken as a sign of approaching cold weather.

Elijah Pool who came into the country with David Niles in 1802, and who married one of Mr. Niles' daughters, became quite careless or lawless respecting Bible rules or divine things. He often indulged in hunting on the Sabbath, and in vain sports. But after his conversion and union with the church in 1825, he became a most devout Christian. He was ready to acknowledge his profession on every occasion, and his example was above suspicion. What rendered him especially noticeable by all classes was his odd way of illustrating Christian experience and sacred truths. Desiring to make plain the liability of young converts falling back into the sins of the world, he compared them to young goslings. He said this fowl would catch hold of a spire of grass, twitch and turn until it would break and let the young gosling fall over backward flat on its back, and then it would cost an effort to recover its standing. So young converts would begin to read the Bible and at length come to some doctrine which they did not understand, and, in pulling and twisting to comprehend its meaning, he would lose his hold on divine grace and fall flat on his back. Then it would require no small effort to regain his foothold and acceptance with his Maker. He affirmed that he was once overtaken with this fault. Men had taught him the doctrine - Once in grace, always in grace - and he sought to see how this could be. He had not lost his power to sin and if he sinned he knew he could not be in grace, and while for a moment trusting in the doctrine he lost his hold on grace and fell flat on his back in the mud. But he arose and washed in the blood of the Lamb, and went on his way rejoicing.

Mr. Pool was remarkable for following his impressions. To him, these were a divine call to duty. One day he was ploughing in his field and the impression came to him that Mrs. Ambrose Ford, a very pious woman, and almost gone with the consumption, wanted to see him before she died. He stopped his oxen in the furrow and at once started on his way. Mr. Ford then lived about ten rods south of Gifford's Corners. Reaching about three-fourths of the distance he met Mr. Ford coming for him, when he accosted him abruptly by saying, "Your wife wishes to see me, does she not?" "Yes", was the reply. "Well, the Lord told me so about half an hour ago and I halloed whoa to my cattle and left them hitched to the plow and I have come with all haste.

"Are you not afraid that your young oxen will run away with your plow and break it?" "No," said Mr. Pool promptly. "The Lord will not let them. He can control them better than I, and he will take care of them until I shall return." Not many hours after his visit and worship Mrs. Ford failed rapidly and could not converse any, dropping away the next night. It really was his last opportunity to pray with her, and it was a comfort to the dying woman.

Before our County infirmary was established at Kingsville, all our towns had what they called the "town poor", and to save each township from taxation from as many of them as they could, the practice arose of warning every newcomer out of town. Hence, it happened sometimes that the most wealthy and respectable had to submit to this unwelcome admission on entering either Conneaut or Monroe. The practice continued until as late as 1834. During this year when our respected citizen Lyman Brewster moved onto the place purchased of Woodbury Hatch where he now lives, he was warned out of town. Hiram Sargent, then constable, served the writ with many misgivings and apologies, begging not to be blamed, as it became his duty under the law. This, Mr. Brewster thought was rather a cool reception.

ACCIDENTS

Asaph Wright, son of Ralph and Polly Wright, a lad of about 11 years of age, was caught under a log drawn by a yoke of oxen and so badly mangled and bruised as to kill the life of his lower limbs and the lower part of his body. For four or five years he had no use of them or even feeling. He could sit in his chair with his feet on a support, and did some needle work, but he did not recover from his hurt. He died June 18, 1830, aged 15 years.

About 1820 Eber Sanford, then a young man clearing land, fell a tree on a hollow stub, breaking the sides, and holding it fast. With great courage he went up to chop it out. In the act, the inclined tree slipped and caught his foot, holding it as in a vice. He called long and loud for help but no one came. He concluded that he must extricate himself or remain in that uncomfortable position til his friends should come to hunt him up. He thought of chopping off that part of his foot held by the tree, then of unjointing his ankle. Fortunately he did not drop his ax, and he began to chop about his foot to see if he could loosen it, and finally succeeded and with much effort he hobbled home where he had a sore job of doctoring and nursing for four weeks.

Orvil Bennett, son of Abram Bennett, and brother of Isaac and Daniel, was killed on election day, being the first Monday in April, 1825. He was logging a mile west of Kent's Corners, on the flats of Paden Creek, tributary of Conneaut, south of the east and west road, on land now owned by George Colby, about 20 rods south and ten rods west of Mr. C's house. His brothers went to the town meeting in the morning and he was expected to go and cast his vote in the afternoon. As he did not come to dinner at noon, search was made for him and he was found by a log heap lying on his back, a lever by his side and a log about 20 inches or two feet through lying across his bowels. It appeared that he had driven his team hauling the log to the heap and in attempting to roll it up alone, it got the advantage of him, knocking him down and falling its full weight upon him. He is described as a fine looking young man, engaged to a lady in Connecticut, and, with a becoming spirit he had come to Monroe to clear a little land, build a log house, and return to marry his young wife and move and make his home with the early settlers of this county. But O! how suddenly did his bright sun of the morning go into a cloud. His remains were buried near Kelloggsville but the site of the grave cannot now be identified.

About the year 1832, David Taylor, who then lived on the Bailey farm, south of Mr. B's farm on the hill, some 2 miles east of the Thompson hill, now Howard's Corners, was at a prayer meeting one Sunday evening, at the South Ridge school house, and took part in the exercises. The next Monday morning before daylight he went to his saw mill south of Thomas Gibson's, the present site of the Robert Clark mill, where he was found a corpse about 10 a.m. It seems that the water wheel had carried up the saw gate to its extreme height and began its descent when the frozen ice on the pitman that shut like shears by the side of the flume, caught and held it freezing more and more from Saturday night until Monday morning. To thaw away the ice and loosen the mill for running, Mr. Taylor had gone with a tea kettle of boiling water and stood with his head between the pitman and and corner of the floom. So that when the ice gave way, the crank dropped and caught his head between the pitman and floom, curshing some bones and holding him fast. The tea kettle dropped into the water below. This was the condition in which he was found, having probably been killed instantly. The intelligence was indeed distressing to his afflicted family, that saw him so well only a few hours before.

Orvil Hatch, son of Rufus Hatch, Jr., about the spring of 1843, married a lovely young lady, who, with himself felt that their fortunes were made. The next August George Colby invited help to raise his house frame, to whom all with pleasure gave assistance. But no one was more active and ready at every point than Orvil Hatch. At the height of every bent he stood to welcome the advancing timbers. When one of the plates was put up and one end shoved onto the outside bent, Mr. Hatch standing on the frame, took hold of it with a will to help it forward, but unfortunately, when the lower end was raised from the ground and supported with pike poles, it made a swing around sideways, past the men(s control, precipitating Mr. Hatch from the bent onto the hard clay below dug from the cellar way, followed by the plate, falling across his body. He was killed so suddenly that he never knew the sense of pain. Placing the corpse on a board it was borne home to Hatch's Corners, at the house of his father, who overwhelmed with such grief, fainted and fell before it. It was a sight too painful for beholders, and they turned with tearful eyes from the sight. It was a distressing dissapointment in the opening of a promising life.

March 22, 1853, Alfred Clark, son of Abner B. Clark, a lad of 14 years, had the misfortune on the return from a hunting tour while standing on a wagon rack in front of Wm. H. Cheney's store across the way from the tavern, of letting his gun slip down and being discharged, sending its whole contents through the palm of his right hand. His hand was placed edgewise over the muzzle of the gun, and the charge entered between the heel of his little finger and his wrist, passing between the cords on to the out and inside of his hand, sweeping away the bones of his fingers, and coming out just back of his thumb. The bullet tore and mangled his hand fearfully and fractured some of the wrist bones. Two physicians were called and they pronounced it the worst looking hand they had ever seen. The family wished to save the thumb and first finger if possible. But after being dressed it continued so painful, and the danger of inflammation setting in, and thus endangering his life, it was decided that amputation must follow.

PART XX.

The second day at 9 o'clock a.m. four of our most honored physicians, Drs. D. W. Raymond, L. D. Kellogg, Amos K. Fifield, and Dr. Bean, were called to perform the surgical operation. The chloroform was administered. Dr. Kellogg took the knife and girdled the wrist, when they fell to skinning the flesh from the bone to the elbow, sawing off the bone about two inches below. Then followed the taking up of the veins and tying them, drawing the flesh and skin over the ends of the bones, and sewing the flesh together. Then the strips of sticking plaster and doing up and the work was done. Poor Alfred had months of the most painful sensations in that hand, as keenly felt as though the hand still remained. But in time it healed, and since then he has been obliged to make his way in life minus one hand. His father was counseled to preserve the amputated hand in a can of alcohol, which he kept for a while, but it so distressed him that he took it away and buried it, wishing never to behold it again. It was a forcible warning against the careless use of fire arms.

Joe Brydle, son of William Brydle, Sr., was drowned in Conneaut Creek, in Tinker Hollow, July 2, 1855, aged 4 years. This little boy had that evening returned from school, and with other children went in swimming below the bridge, down the hill from his father's house, when on venturing in the water too deep, was straggled and then floated down stream some twenty rods when his father overtook him and caught him out of the water. Rev. Rufus Clark attended his funeral at the South Ridge church, July 3, 1855.

George Will while dressing his pork slipped and fell into the hot water and was so badly scalded that he died within a few days. His funeral was attended by the pastor of F. B. Church, South Ridge, Dec. 30, 1855.

TRAGEDY

In writing these sketches, one of the most heartrending events that ever darkened the pages of history falls to our lot in this connection to record.

Ralph K. Wright, a man of unusual kindness, for a few weeks had shown signs of mental aberation, declaring at times that he had a duty to perform, without defining the nature of it, was strangely exorcised, on the morning of Tuesday, July 12, 1870. He was a man of 60 years, and had lived a most peaceful and quiet life. On the evening before, he, with his family visited at the house of Stephen Daniels, Mrs. D. being a cousin, and on returning home, retired as usual. At 3:30 o'clock the next morning he attacked his family with deadly intention, without any previous notice of further derangement. With an ax he struck his wife while in bed, when she screamed and leaped out to flee, with him in pursuit. His four girls in the chamber hearing their mother's cry, rushed immediately down and the oldest ran to her father and catching the ax told him to give it to her, which he really did. But, on surrendering it, he rushed to the woodshed and returned with another, and following his wife out the front door, overtook her in the yard half way to the street gate, and, fetching another savage blow, with the edge on her head, brought her down sweltering in her own blood. The girls fled in flight as before a demon, two north, to call Corwin N. Payne, who lived at the foot of the hill, and the other two south, to Shelby Smith's and O. D. Shepard's. Milton O. Shepard went to the church and rang the bell, alarming the whole neighborhood. Messrs. Smith and Shepard were the first on the ground to behold the frightful tragedy. Mrs. Wright lay gasping in death in the front yard, the doors of the house wide open, a brisk fire burning in the chamber in the south end of the wood shed with a stout south wind blowing. The crazy brain that directed the hands in these deeds did not appear, and fears were entertained at every step that he would leap from some secluded place and attempt the same work of death upon them. With great caution they proceeded in the search of the house, following the tracks of blood from room to room, and up the chamber stairs, beholding his bloody finger prints on the wall, and his steps into the girls' room, which led to the impression that he intended to have taken their lives also, and did not remember that they had fled.

Neighbors came hurrying up and they proceeded to the outhouses, and thence to the barn, through the stabling, onto the hay and scaffolds, but no traces of him were found here. At length, about 6 or 7 o'clock, one of their number climbing on a fence at a proper distance to look into the cow-shed loft, he was discovered in a kneeling posture close to the roof and motionless. Entering the apartment he was found with a rope hung to one of the rafters and a loop about his neck, leaning forward with his weight upon it, where he had lain so long that the blood had ceased to circulate and he had ceased to breathe. His remains were taken to the dwelling and laid out. The funeral services were observed on Thursday, July 14, at the house, Rev. A. F. Bryant officiating. One of the largest congregations ever known in these parts waited the hour. A more heart-broken group of children never followed the remains of parents to the tomb. Both corpses were laid side by side in one grave, and the children, like a flock smitten without a shepherd, returned, orphans and homeless.

Oh! what is man without reason? He goes reeling under his manhood and raving in his insanity. The kindest husband is turned to works of cruelty, and deeds of darkest dye. From a loving protector and supporter, which he heretofore has given, he is changed to inflictions of suffering, the unreasonable acts of the maniac and the destruction of a mad man. The delightful companion is gone, leaving only the wreck of a shattered humanity. How careful ought man to be with his health, lest reason should reel on its throne, and his hands be stained with the blood of his dearest friends.

PART XXI.
CARRIAGE MAKERS

The first wagon and carriage maker at South Ridge was Abner B. Clark. He went to Connecticut, learned his trade and returned, and set up his business in his father's shop, which stood on the west side of the Center road, nearly opposite the new school building. This was about the year 1827. He continued to manufacture carriages until his death, which occurred July 28, 1860, being 33 years. He never put an unseasoned or brittle stick of timber in, and he gained the reputation of making the best work in Ashtabula county. Alpheas Kenny learned the trade of Mr. Clark, and set up his shop across the way south of the post office. Mr. Kenny soon sickened and died, and various ones have supplied the public, among which, with great credit to themselves, were the firm of Armstrong Brothers, now the accomplished carriage makers in Bradford, Pa. A. E. Woodbury, cousin of Judge Woodbury, is now erecting a wagon shop opposite the post office. (1880).

Blacksmiths have been so numerous that we could not recall many names, though they are all worthy of honor. Among those who are remembered with much interest are: Henry Pierce, Daniel McHoney, William Stults, Wheeler Sanford, Thomas P. Woods, Simon Cheney, Abel and Asa Shepard, Wm. H. Cheney, Horace Cass, Joel Couch, Heman Sanford, and the present skillful artisan, Sylvester Splitstone.

Athletic sports were among the most interesting things of those early days. Instead of sitting down under the burdens of a new country, and suffering in the spirit of the "low-poe", all hearts went cheerily as the merry bell. At the town meetings, the raising of buildings, company trainings and other secular meetings, some games were to be played, gymnastic exercises wrought, and other manly sports enjoyed. The playing of goal was one of the most interesting games. It tried the speed and endurance of the contestants. The one last touched with the hand was always made the pursuer while the other fled before him, and sometimes it was continued for a hundred rows, or even half a mile, so determined were the parties on conquest.

In these, the young men, especially, took part. The Durkees, Hatches, Sanfords and Thompsons, were among the most expert. Nimble as an eel, William Durkee could run and leap over an ordinary fence like a deer. At one time, when pursued by Mr. S. who might have overtaken him in a straight line, Mr. Durkee outdistanced him most easily by taking his course to a fence, and as fast as his pursuer would change sides of the fence, Mr. Durkee would leap to the other side, as if it cost him but little effort. At times, that the crowd might witness his dexterity, two men would draw a line, under which he would walk and let it touch the top of his head, and with the agility of an athlete, he would bound from side to side. Such nimbleness would excel in the foot-race around the goal.

Jumping was another sport in which the boys at school as well as men at the raising of buildings, and town meetings, indulged. Samuel Eaton, Jr. and Samuel Fox, were among the most expert in this exercise. Our post master, Asahel Thompson, usually excelled. It was no difficult task for him to clear a ten foot pole at a single leap. In three successive jumps he would often clear thirty-three feet, and in a few instances he made in three successive leaps, 36 feet. This is the best we have known. At a single bound, Eber Sanford at the age of 20, made a leap across his father's race-way, from his mill, which was 12 feet. He sprang from bank to bank. In this exercise the boys at school would often become so lame as with difficulty to walk. To skip, hop and jump, was another form of this sport.

Wrestling is one of the most ancient exercises of which we have knowledge, as the wrestling of the angel with Jacob proves. For the purpose of giving spectators the opportunity of beholding the contest, a large ring was made around the contestants. With a side hold or an arms-length the object of each was to bring the other to the ground. Hours would be spent in the struggle, while enthusiastic observers stood looking on. Nathaniel Brooks, at arms-length, was one of the best of wrestlers, and at one time "Cock of the Walk". At another time, at side hold, Ira Parker achieved the conquest. At another, Ebin Foster, at another, Eber Sanford. Each in his turn ranked first, not only in Conneaut, but in Ashtabula county. At a general training Mr. Sanford threw Benjamin Naper of Ashtabula, in two successive holds. Before this, Mr. Naper stood first, but in this contest he became second and Mr. Sanford became chief.

Pitching quoits was indulged in by some, but the play soon grew into a game for rum, and the more steady did not long continue the practice.

Baseball, with usually ten or twelve on a side, was played by the middle aged and the young. The great object in choosing sides was, to get one that was an expert in throwing, and one who was an expert in catching the ball. It was a rule that if one could strike the ball hard enough to knock it so far away that he could run the circuit of the four goals before it could be returned and passed through the middle, it was his turn to bat again. It so happened on one occasion, that Asahel Thompson, one of the best, if not the best in this game, made five successive trips before missing a turn to knock. At a town meeting where he played with such men as Calvin Appleby and Nathaniel Harmon, Mr. Thompson lamed his hand catching the ball, as to lay him aside from his business for some time. He was one of the best catchers and therefore was chosen with an eye to that.

Lifting was an exercise of the most strong and robust, rather than the many. At times they would get into a strife and raise some very heavy burdens, and at times one would bear off the laurel and other times, another. At John Kennedy's where Mr. Bliss now lives, in raising his 30x40 foot barn, several laid out their strength on one corner of the sills, with all the timbers on it, before the bents were up, and failed. But to their surprise Mr. E. Sanford took his turn and raised the corner. Then different ones offered a prize, and Ira Parker raised the corner and took the ward. This was a grand achievement. One man offered a gallon of whiskey, and then another and another until five and a half gallons were offered and Mr. Parker took the prize. Mr. Sanford did not care to lift again.

June 21, 1821, at the raising of Apolus Thompson's house, Ira Parker lifted one of the sills, but could not raise it onto his knees. Eber Sanford took it and raised it onto his knees and laid it down again. These were the Hercules of America, but they did not receive the honors of the athletes in the Olympic games of Greece. The athlete of ancient times rode thorough the streets of their city in splendid chariots drawn by four white horses. But the citizens of South Ridge had no such rewards to give. To those who enjoyed the athletic sports, their exercise inured their constitutions to hardships and strengthened them for the burdens of a new country. With bones, muscles, nerves and sinews trained in vigorous action on all aieds, it gave the pioneers ability to grapple with the sturdy sons of the forest, removing the heavy timber and opening the rich soil to the warming sun and seeds of cultivation.

PART XXII.

MILITARY

The company training at South Ridge and the south part of Sale no Conneaut, was instituted in the fall of 1817. All male citizens over 18 years of age and under 45, were notified to appear at 10 o'clock A.M. at the house of Jacob Williams, now the home of Levant M. Horton, armed and equipped as the law required, and prepared to do military duty. Daniel Sawtell, Jr., then living on the Clark Hunt farm, now George W. Howard's was Captain, Marshall Williams, Lieutenant, and Eber Sanford, Ensign. Within a year or two Captain Sawtell removed from the limits of the company and Lieut. Williams was advanced to the Captaincy, Eber Sanford to the office of Lieutenant, and Irs Parker Ensign.

About 1821 Samuel Kennedy was appointed Captain, and held the office till about 1830, and Irs Parker Lieutenant. The Captain had a very pompous way of appearing before the company, and still was a very fine looking officer, which, among the spectators often occasioned remarks and smiles. He had his company gathered at the home of Eber Sanford, and drilled it along the street. About 1829, the Captain was marching his men up and down the highway, when, wishing them to oblique to the right, i.e. step at an angle of twenty-five degrees to the right, he gave the word of command, saying, "Ob-li-que-ly to the right". Such a wrong pronunciation of the word excited great merriment among the spectators. A gentleman from Kelloggs-ville, N.K., seeing such a fine opportunity for displaying his rhyming talents, made this and many other words of mispronunciation, the subject of versification. That the memory of our readers may be revived and they enjoy a hearty laugh, we will reproduce two verses with the chorus. The Captain had let slip the word alligators for regimentals, hence it opened with the tune of Yankee Doodle, in the following lines, calling the militia from Monroe:

Ye gallant soldiers of Monroe
Slip on your alligators,
And into Salem rise and go -
And stand before your betters.

CHORUS

Yankee Doodle, never fret,
But take the whiskey freely,
As long as you can travel straight
And not go ob-li-que-ly.

And there obliged to train by law,
And since we must come to it,
It's in-a-tic-ler, this you know,
Who calls us out to do it.

Some had complained because the notice was not given by the equal officer to meet him at South Ridge on training day, and to express the idea that it was not absolutely necessary, he coined the word in-a-tic-ler. Notwithstanding he was so careless in his language, he was esteemed as a good officer, and within a year or two from this time, advanced to a Major and was the ob-li-que-ly officer. Captain Howe succeeded him and served for a shore time.

September 10, 1832, Duncan McArthur, Gov. of Ohio, appointed Aaron Clark Captain, in which he served two years, when he removed to Jefferson, being employed to write in the Auditor's office of Ashtabula county. Mr. Clark's commission assigned him authority as "Captain of the Seventh Company in the First Regiment, Third Brigade and Ninth Militia Division in the Militia of this State." He does not remember who his First and Second Lieutenants were.

For a number of years there was much trouble in getting men to serve as officers, and there could be no training that would serve the purpose of drill. Things ran down to a low rate in military affairs.

In 1841 under Wilson Shannon, Governor of Ohio, a revision of the Military Law was made and a more thorough organization effected.

Then ours became the 3rd Company, 1st Regiment, 2nd Brigade and 21st Division of the Militia of Ohio. The commissioned officers were: Asahel C. Thompson, Captain; A. W. Wright, Lieutenant; Sidney A. Kennedy, Ensign; and the non-commissioned officers were: William Durkee, 1st Sergeant; David Taylor, 2nd; Rufus Clark, 3rd; Daniel Hill, 4th. Corporals, Henry Hicks, 1st; Eleazer F. Ring, 2d; Zenas H. Wright, 3rd. Musicians, Edward F. Clark, Isaac Judson, Wiley Tinker, Merritt Clark, Newton B. Payne. Among the generals whose names are familiar are General Henry Keyes, 1829; and Gen. A. Bruce Randall, 1837. The Colonels were, Col. Edward Fifield and Alfred Crittenden, 1835, Col. A. Elder, 1837, and Col. Harvey Williams, 1842. Under Col Crittenden, Reuben Sanborn served as Major.

It became a great treat for the private soldiers to gather at the houses of their officers early in the morning on training days, and fire heavy guns under their windows. If the officers did not rise from their beds and bid them welcome and treat them with a drink of liquor, they would increase the charge of powder, and sometimes burst their guns. This was called, "waking up the officers." Sometimes at 2 o'clock in the morning, though the night was dark, the roaring of guns would begin. It was esteemed an honor to receive such attention. In calling the roll, if any were not present to answer to their names, a pin was thrust through it, and they were fined $2.

The Company of Cavalry was formed out of volunteers in Ashtabula, Kingsville, Conneaut and Monroe. Elisha Strong of Ashtabula was Captain; Asahel Thompson of South Ridge, Lieutenant. A few names of the company can be remembered as follows: Samuel Eaton, Abner Kellogg; Walker S. Bennett; Henry Putney; Nelson Burrington; Mr. Finney. Finally Mr. Strong was advanced to the office of Colonel and Mr. Thompson was made Captain. As an inducement for them to enlist, the law granted each enlistment, one year's time free from military duty, to equip.

All the companies belonging to the 1st Regiment, were mustered once a year for a general training. At first, they were required to meet at Ashtabula, but a little later at some house on the Ridge Road about half way between Amboy and North Kingsville, under Col. A. Elder. On one occasion they met in Conneaut. At these gatherings our citizens would rise early in the morning and loads would go on their way by sunrise, or they might be absent at roll call and be fined $2. At the appointed hour the Sergeants of each company with the music, would drum out their men calling on the privates at every round to fall into rank file.

When thus formed, the Sergeant detached the music to go and march the commissioned officers on to the ground to take command. Next, the whole number of companies thus formed were consolidated into a regiment. The music under one officer was sent to march out the Colonel, Lieutenant Colonel and 2nd Lieutenant Colonel, on horseback in beautiful uniforms.

A brief drill ensued, after which the regiments were marched on to good ground forming a hollow square, into which the chaplain was called with his attendants, and prayer was offered to the God of the armies of America, and to give success to their forces on the day of battle. Then at the command of the Colonel, the fifes played, the drums beat, and the heavy tread of soldiers made the ground jar beneath them. Closing with a short address from the commanding officer in chief, the regiment was dismissed for a year, and about 4 o'clock P.M. all parties hastened for their teams for a start homeward. Usually it was long after dark before the soldiers, thus transferred into citizens, could reach their places of rest in their own homes.

PART XXIII.

After a series of years the people began to think less of these annual days of military drill and their interest in them began to decline. They realized so little benefit from them that they came to be regarded as nearly, if not quite, useless. One week's thorough training in tactics would do more to prepare soldiers for the order of battle than a whole lifetime of two day's annual parade. For some time before the War of Rebellion, the military law became a dead letter until it was repealed and the people excused from both company and general trainings. Only the independent companies were kept up and made ready for service.

Sometimes our citizens were compelled to walk to Ashtabula to attend general training. On one occasion when Harvey Hatch was Captain, Solomon Durkee and William Durkee started before day on foot and walked the distance, did military service, and being dismissed a little before sundown, began their return towards home. Reaching Kingsville town line a drenching shower overtook them, leaving not a dry thread in their clothing. The night was dark and they could not see the way. At length, they came to a log house, and on going in, they found George Wright there, having preceded them a short time. The lunch in their pockets was well soaked without tea or coffee. The woman's husband was gone, but she said it was bad for men to be turned out of doors on such a night, and they found rest on the soft side of the floor. In the morning they arose at dawn and walked home before breakfast. Such were some of the hardships of those times to keep up military drill.

Previous to the laying out of these grounds, burials were made in various places. Frederick Kellogg, child of Peck and Polly Clark, that died Sept. 7, 1818, aged nearly one year, was buried not far, as we suppose, from the northeast corner of the present yard, under the boughs of a large tree. But soon after, by the removal of stumps and breaking of the sod, the site was lost, and it has never since been identified. Another place was thought to be more desirable on Jacob Thayer's farm, on the high ground about one hundred rods east of his son, Lewis A. Thayer's house, and about 30 rods north by east of John Darling's house. Here, several interments were made. The remains of David Hicks, who died March 28, 1819, of Thomas Mastin, Aug. 18, 1822, and Jacob Williams, Jan. 13, 1822, his son, Marshall, who died May 31, 1826, and others were buried here. But in the spring of 1827 the importance of having a good yard, regularly divided into lots, and numbered, was talked up, a meeting called and men appointed to secure two acres, donated, off the northwest corner of Joseph Lillie's farm, the present site of our cemetery. The day being appointed for the people to come and assist in the work, Peck Clark having prepared stakes of sawn lumber 2x2 inches, with numbers in each to designate the lots. Of the yard a map was made, as fast as men selected their lots, their names were written by the numbers. Hence by referring to the map, everyone's lot could be identified. This was about the last week of March.

While this work was progressing in younger hands, the more aged collected in groups and entered into conversation. Seth Thompson, Sr., addressing Eli Sanford, Esq., said: According to the course of nature, I shall be the first to lie in this yard." "No" responded Mr. Sanford, "I shall be the first." and according to his premonition, it proved true. Mr. Sanford rode to Conneaut the next day and returned feeling ill, and in less than a week he was a corpse. He died April 6, 1827, aged nearly sixty years. His funeral services were attended by a layman, Mr. Jonathan Gilbert, who made some remarks and offered prayer. In those times ministers were not as numerous as now, and the laity had to take their place. Mr. Thompson lived about a year and a half longer, dying Oct. 25, 1828, aged 68 years.

At this time the dead were encased in a plain, substantial coffin, made solid with screws and stained red, at a small expense. They had no hearses, but for miles the dead were borne on a tier on men's shoulders to their resting place. A long procession marched in advance of the pall bearers, and at intervals, four men would step back opening to the right and left, and letting it pass on between them and the corpse brought along, when they would relieve the carriers and thus go on alternating to the end. A burial then would cost the bereaved family about six or seven dollars. I find by looking over Peck Clark's day book charges for coffins as follows: For David Hicks, March 20, 1819, $3; for Captain Samuel Kennedy's father, made of cherry with trimmings, lettered with brass nails, $4; for Thomas Vastin, Aug. 20, 1822, $2.50; it being made of less expensive lumber, yet found all the trimmings; for Marshall Williams, May 31, 1826, $3.

This is a wide difference from the present, when coffins will cost the poor as well as the rich from $50.00 to $200. And those were much better made than those of our times. This is seen when the dead are disinterred for burials in other cemeteries. The early made coffins still hold together with firmness while the late made coffins have fallen in pieces.

It is appalling to think how many friends and neighbors have been consigned to this silent city. One of our citizens who has taken the trouble to count the deaths from Volney Jacob's along the road to Farnham's mill, a distance of about two miles, tells us that no less than 80 persons have died, whose remains have found a resting place in South Ridge Cemetery. This is a number that would more than equal those now living along the same distance. Other districts of no greater size have, undoubtedly, furnished as many. What a world of death is ours in which we live!

The names of eleven soldiers have been buried here: Seth Thompson, Sr., Israel Messenger, Peck Clark, Nathan Brooks, Zebediah Brooks, Lemuel Jones, Barton C. Rouse, Elisha Judson, and Judson Rathbun, all of whom served in the war of 1812-15, and Don Alphonzo Farnham and Corwin Richardson in the war of the Rebellion. A larger number of volunteers never returned, among whom were Edward F. King and John Crandall.

DURKEE HILL CEMETERY

Durkee Hill Cemetery also was a burying ground before it was laid out into a graveyard. Just before the death of Solomon Durkee, Sr. which occurred Dec. 29, 1843, aged 72 years, he requested that his remains might be interred just north of the orchard of his son, Solomon, Jr., close on the brow of the creek, west of the Center road. Of course, his family respected his desires, and as he had served in the Revolutionary War, all felt glad to bow with deference to the wishes of the old veteran. The next year, June 11, 1834, Elisha Spaulding died, aged 80 years and his remains were consigned to the same resting place, near Mr. D's grave, in the same row of lots. The people began to think it a desirable location for a neighborhood cemetery, and Solomon Durkee, Jr. gave an acre of land inclosing the two graves already made, on condition that the people should fence and take care of it.

About three-fourths of the lot lies in Conneaut, and the remainder in Monroe. This was done about 1834, but a deed was not given of the lot until the autumn of 1878, when it was thought best to have it a town cemetery and then they could call for funds to make repairs. Now the trustees have the matter in hand and are looking after its interests.

This home of the dead is beginning to be crowded with occupants, and ere long will need to be enlarged. The remains of soldiers who have been buried in Durkee Hill Cemetery are Solomon Durkee, Sr., of the Revolution, and Oliver Benton and Solomon Durkee, son of Alanson, who served in the Rebellion. A large number died on the field of battle and their remains were not brought home. Joel Benton, Elisha Abbott Spaulding, wounded in the battle of Chickamauga, Sept. 2, 1863, and died in hospital at Chattanooga, six days later. Asa Blodgett Spaulding, on the battlefield of Perryville, Ky. Oct. 8, 1862; Franklin Felch, in the fall of 1863, Edward Levett, who died on his way home. These are a few that can be remembered.

A REPRESENTATIVE.

A representative of Ashtabula county in the Legislature of the State of Ohio was chosen from South Ridge at the October election of 1833, in the person of Ira Benton, Esq. For years Mr. Benton had served as Justice of the Peace, and run four or five other kinds of business in wool carding, cloth dressing, cutting out lumber, grist grinding, etc. , and still he could add another in legislating for the state. Among the many things done at this session, Mr. Benton obtained a charter for the Baptist church at Conneaut. He entered heartily into every subject that pertained to the good of his constituents. It was probable the question concerning the sale of the school lands lying in Ohio, that drew Mr. Benton out in an elaborate speech, which was published in the newspapers of our county, and was read with so much interest. There were about 60,000 acres in the southern part of the state which had been appropriated by the government for the common schools, and the propriety of selling it would command but ten shillings per acre, and using it immediately for schools, or keeping it until it could be disposed of at advanced rates, was the question discussed at the polls, and in the Legislature. Mr. Benton was in favor of delaying its sale until it would bring more money. The land was sure to rise in the market, and our Representative wanted the people to have the advantage of that rise.

Mr. Benton soon began to see that alcoholic drink as a beverage was an evil, and only an evil, and he became a thorough temperance man. His distillery was discontinued, and he removed to Kelloggville, and went into business with Judge Moffit, during which time he took the job of building the Congregational Church building. At the time of raising the frame he refused to furnish liquor for drink, a great novelty at that time, and fears were entertained that the drinkers of whiskey, being greatly in the ascendancy, would not give their assistance, and the building couldn't be put up. Hence some of the staunch temperance men of the South Ridge proffered their assistance, among whom were Deacon Alfred Crittenden, and Harry Williams. But the frame went up without any difficulty, and a fine lunch was served to all the men, with tea and other wholesome drink. About 1839, Mr. Benton removed to Galena, Illinois, where he lived and died. He was a member of the Baptist Church and was one of the very best of men. Many times in our youth, the writer of these sketches heard Mr. Benton urge the Gospel on the attention of the young, holding it to be the foundation of every moral and political good.

DEBATING CLUB.

The debating Club of the South Ridge by the young men, about the winter of 1839-40, was one of the most instructing institutions we have known in these parts. Nothing was ever started that set all classes to reading up on every variety of questions like this. It became a school in the professions, arts, sciences, enterprises and governments. Scarcely an important question of the day failed to receive its due attention. Theology, ecclesiastics, law, politics, philosophy, history, home, and foreign news, human rights, temperance slavery, etc., each in its turn came before the disputants. The result was, the young men of our place became fluent and acceptable speakers on nearly all the living questions. At home or abroad, they could converse freely with the leading men of our day.

Some of those who started this important school can be remembered as follows: M. W. Wright, Horatio Jones, Edward P. Clark, Harvey Williams, Lorenzo Wright, Francis Wright, Edwin R. Williams, Eleazer F. Ring, Rufus Clark and later Reuben Sanborn and Rev. F.W. Straight. At times, this absorbed all the interests of the young and its benefits became equal to any literary society of our land. Nothing ever so improved the tone of thought and intellectual character. Its worth was beyond price.

At first the club held its meetings in the school house near the cemetery, next in the session room of the church, and lastly in a building which the members bought and moved onto a lot just west of the post office. This they named "Congress Hall." To add to their facilities for improvement they raised a fund and bought a good supply of books, which they denominated "South Ridge Circulating Library." Thus a stimulant to reading was effected and with such close attention to the matter read, that the substance could be called into use at a moment's notice. Soon these young men were invited to speak at various points in Monroe and other towns. They read digests of southern Slave laws and discussed the question of Abolition, showing its bearing on American citizens, and the duties of the free States to the Slave.

Just before the State election, October, 1844, the candidate for Senator, Hon. A.B.S.R., in his lecturing tour, made South Ridge his last place to lecture in, which happened to be on the evening of the Debating Club, the former at the school building and the latter at the session room of the church. The club sent a delegation of two members, M. W. Wright and his companion, to go and invite the Hon. gentleman and his congregation to come on to the Club Room. Mr. R. with five others came, and he spoke, giving liberty for any question which the listeners might feel disposed to ask. Among them the one relative to the fact whether the people of the District of Columbia were entitled to representation as the citizens of several states. The Hon. gentleman seemed not informed on the question, and when he attempted to enlighten the Club he betrayed his ignorance and found the members ready to tell him all about the matter. The candidate, especially in this matter, was wiser than when he came.

ANTI-SLAVERY

The anti-slavery question has ever been of vital interest to the people of South Ridge. The first published facts were received with a welcome as to indicate a willingness to know the truth and the whole truth. Yet all sides were represented, the neutrals waiting to note the results of the discussions, and the pro-slavery joining with the slave-holders in calling the abolitionists "fanatics", "incendiaries," "negro thieves," "cut-throats," and other hard names. But a goodly number regarded the liberty of the slave as consistency of character in carrying out the "Declaration of Independence" to the colored race as well as to the white. It was simply reaffirming that "All men were created free and equal and were endowed with inalienable rights, such as life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness."

PART XXV.

They intended to abide strictly by the Constitution of the American Anti-Slavery Society in discussing the question, showing its bearing, its cruelty to the slave, its cancerous malignity to our government, and that the good of slaveholder and slave with all concerned, demanded its immediate abolition. And at that time they thought that the anti-slavery side of the question could so clearly be made to appear, that the South would see it to be for their interest to liberate their slaves, that every State would peacefully proclaim acts of emancipation, and in no case be compelled to countenance the liberty of the oppressed by taking up arms or resorting to physical force.

To disseminate these principles and shed light on American slavery, the liberty-loving portion of our citizens set themselves to work. They circulated the mammoth pamphlets, "Liberty", "Slavery as it is, by a thousand witnesses", the speech of Thomas Martin Morris, two speeches of Hon William Slade of Vermont, containing most exhausting arguments, and later, Hon. J. R. Giddings' speech on the Florida war, etc. Also newspapers, such as, "The Colored American" published at New York, "The Cincinnati Philanthropist" published at Cincinnati, "The National Era", published in Washington, D.C., and other anti-slavery publications. In those early times, anti-slavery publications were limited and the object of pro-slavery men was to render them so scarce that our nation should be kept as it had been for more than a century, profoundly in the dark. Hence, it cost abolitionists no small efforts to obtain these documents. The censorship on the press and postmasters made both criminals; the former for printing facts concerning slavery, and the latter for delivering their printed matter to the citizens through the mails to whom they were addressed. At Charleston, South Carolina, the postmaster took a bushel of such anti-slavery documents and burned them. Every effort was made to prevent any exposure of the enormous evils of the system. The public mind had become so debauched with its malignity, men did not feel willing to be told that American Slavery was the "sum of all villainy". They could not consent to acknowledge that free America was tolerating a system of oppression more wicked and cruel than any other nation. It was considered a disgrace to be anti-slavery, and some even thought that an abolitionist would, through necessity, have his complexion in some degree changed to that of a colored man. His principles of equal rights to all men would so thoroughly permeate physical nature that they would descend to their posterity, and in one instance it was reported that the first child of an abolitionist was so impressed as to be born with purple fingers and negro features. So ignorant at the outset were American citizens.

Ralph Wright was one of the first and most active in getting facts before the people and, because he would go from house to house, carrying his papers to be read, he was called the "Abolition Missionary". Being afflicted with sore eyes and not able to read or work, he spent much of his time in this way. Nor did these obstacles militate against him. On the contrary, it proved a great advantage to the cause. For, as he could not see to read, others out of pity would read his papers for him. The farmer, the mechanic, the miller, the merchant, the divine, would stop and read to accomodate "Uncle Ralph", when they would not think of doing such a thing for themselves. The most pro-slavery would not be so rude as not to do it. Hence they began to be interested in anti-slavery facts and the sooner became liberty men. It so happened that every week brought new development of the evils of American slavery, and it was of special interest each one should know it. Consequently Mr. W. had it read by every one whom he met, which familiarized him so fully with every part he could rehearse with great precision. The result was, he became virtually a walking encyclopedia on the history of anti-slavery movements. He was ready to give a very accurate account of nearly every question that had arisen. The writer of these sketches has heard him minutely delineate the facts about the right of petition, the gag rule, the power of Congress to abolish slavery, and the slave trade in the District of Columbia, implied faith, the Giddings censure, the J. Q. Adams censure, the Lovejoy murder, the mobbing of the press, the Missouri and Maryland prisoners, the strife for speakership, the Seminole Indians and the Florida war, the paying of $70,000 to slave holders for the 52 Maistad captives, who asserted their right to liberty, etc. Many times Mr. Wright expressed a strong desire that he might live to see slavery abolished, but at last, with sad disappointment, he said, "I did think I should live to see this terrible evil abolished, but the way government is ordering its course, I do not believe I shall." He died April 30, 1860, almost one year before the war of the Rebellion began, but his soul, like John Brown's went "Marching On."

Seconding the labors of Mr. Wright and others, the young men of South Ridge admitted to their Debating Club the question of abolition and freely discussed it. Among the pro-slavery supporters, Major Sanborn, for a short time, stood first, but with the advocates of abolition were enrolled such boys as H. W. Wright, Francis Wright, E. F. Ring, Lorenzo Wright, Rufus Clark. One evening the Club was called to meet at the school house to discuss the question. On reaching the place the boys found strong men called to speak against them. Buzzel Woodbury, then a student of the law at Kelloggsville, father of Judge Woodbury, and Dr. Spencer of Kingsville. The former read a digest of the laws in the Southern States, and drew the conclusion that slavery was fastened upon them and it could not be abolished even if the slave holders wished it to be. The latter gave a history of the system and argued that it had grown so strong that it would threaten the life of the nation to undertake to destroy it. The agitation of this subject in the North tended to tighten the chains of slavery, and make the condition of the slaves worse. Hence, anti-slavery men were inflicting greater evils by attempting its overthrow.

The reply to these arguments was that the power that made slave laws was a power that could unmake them, and enact laws of liberty. And if slavery had wound its coils around us like a boa constrictor, with purposes to crush us, and would be enraged if we resisted, we should make the more desperate effort to break these coils and destroy the monster. Hence, if the chains were drawn the tighter, they were the nearer being broken. The discussion waxed hot and both parties went away crying victory.

PART XXVI.

The general Conference of Free Baptists held at South Ridge October, 1939, took strong ground against American slavery, and was then understood to be the first order of Christians in the country that had taken such an advanced position. Dr. Wm. M. Housely was here from Kentucky to be ordained as a Free Baptist, but he was rejected because he claimed three slaves, and would not grant them their right to liberty. The question was extensively discussed in General Conference. Notice of the time being given, the church was crowded at the appointed hour. Men came to give counsel to the F.B. denomination not to throw so much light as to put out the people's eyes, and injure both the F. B's and the cause of the slave.

Judge Moffit of Kingsville came , advising that he knew the people of Ohio better than our New England Ministers and delegates, and that such decided anti-slavery principles pushed forward at that time, would prove disastrous. But Lawyer Lovejoy, of Conneaut, brother of the lamented Rev. O. Lovejoy of Alton, spoke enthusiastically for the slave, and urged strong measures against slavery, as a sin against God and a crime against man. It was time for him and all others to be in earnest. His brother's blood was crying to slave holders from the ground, and he would not be a dumb dog when our lives were in such peril. The Free Baptists never saw any reason to regret the advance step they had taken. They chose to be right with the few, rather than wrong with the many. Since that day they have seen the whole nation come to their ranks. This warm discussion gave such an impetus to the anti-slavery cause at South Ridge that the next week after General Conference adjourned, the people took measures for advanced steps in a regularly constituted body for work, bound to their purpose by a preamble and constitution.

The only anti-slavery society of which we have any account in the township of Conneaut was organized at South Ridge Church, on the evening of Oct. 23, 1839. On the 14th, according to previous notice, Rev. D.M.L. Rollin, the pastor, had given a lecture on the evils of American slavery, and at the close of which a committee was appointed to draft a preamble and constitution, consisting of Diocletian Wright, Rev. D.M.L. Rollin, Rev. Gardner Dean, Alonzo Moulton, and Silas A. Davis. At the second meeting, with Rev. Asa Jacobs in the chair, the preamble and constitution were adopted and the officers elected. For President, Rev. Asa Jacobs; Vice-President, B.H. King; Secretary, S. A. Davis. The membership immediately grew to about 150. Our citizens generally joined and went to work to disseminate their principles. We also find the names of Rev. E.F. Dickinson, Loren Gould, David Phillips, Benjamin Carpenter, Esq. Hiram Lake, Esq., P. W. Grant, Benson Owen, Esq., Alfred Crittenden, John and Simon Brown, Robert Lyon, Martin H. Collins, and others who joined in the enterprise of the Ridgeville people.

The Society held its meeting at such times and places as the officers deemed proper. Hence, they were not limited, and in their minutes, we find adjournments to the Christian church, the Bradley or Crittenden school house, Putney school house, etc. At every annual meeting new officers were elected and lectures delivered. Among the speakers names we find Rev. J.S. Barras, of Kelloggsville, Rev. Asa Jacobs, Benjamin Carpenter, Esq., Benjamin Owen, Esq. Rev. F.W. Straight, Rev. E. F. Dickinson, Rev. Stephen Bathrick.

Among the fugitive slaves who eloquently pleaded their own cause were Milton Clark, a few years from slavery in Kentucky, John Girley, who was a slave 19 years, had been free 9, and had been sent to school by Garrett Smith, of Peterborough, N.Y., and in seven years had lectured in nearly every free State in the Union; Thomas Clarkson, a name which the Quakers gave the fugitive for fear the slave holders would capture him if called by his right name. He was from Albamar county, Va. On his way he was caught by slave holders and papers read in the name of the great commonwealth of Virginia, demanding his immediate rendition to slavery. But he had armed himself with a slingshot, i.e. a lead ball fastened to his right wrist, with which he could knock a man down, and using this at just the right moment on his assailants, he came on his way without further molestation. Mr. Clarkson was only three years from slavery. Henry P. Riley and wife were 7 years out of slavery, during which time they had attended school in Oberlin six months. They spoke with great credit to themselves and satisfaction of the people.

Such are a few specimens of the speakers of South Ridge, and the public attention was held steadily to the study of that nefarious system which was sapping the very foundation of our Republic. Like a cancer it was eating out their vitals, and we, as a nation, were driven to the necessity of destroying that, or it would destroy us. The feeling had become strong against the great evil, and under the growing light it was becoming stronger.

But this anti-slavery society had gone on with its work only about six years, to 1845, before the cause became political in its movements. April 21, 1845, the President, Benjamin Carpenter, Esq. was called on to present a list of names, as delegates to meet in the Ashtabula County Liberty Convention, to be held in Jefferson, May 8, 1845, to take decided political action on the subject. Lawyer Carpenter, the president, named the following gentlemen: Edward P. Clark, Reuben Sanborn, M. W. Wright, S. A. Davis, A. Thompson, Rev. F.W. Straight, Hiram Lake, A. Moulton, Rev. E.F. Dickinson and Loren Gould. From this time their work became absorbed in political action and the society's specific labor was not further needed.

PART XXVII.

The Fugitive Law was one of the most objectionable enactments to the people of South Ridge. They never could feel reconciled to have this disgraceful Bill blacken the pages of our Statutes. In effect, it tore down the bright flag of our nation, and drabbed it in the mud. Besides being unjust and wicked, it tarnished our fair name among the nations of the earth, and made them laugh at our inconsistency. Nor was the national enactment of such a Bill in Congress enough. Slaveholders would have one of similar character in Ohio. During the session of 1838-9, the Kentucky Legislature sent a committee to the Ohio assembly, requesting the passage of such a Bill in our State. At that time there was a slaveholder in our Legislature in the person of Hon. Alex. Waddle, from Franklin county. He owned slaves and hired them out to slave-drives in Kentucky. Mr. Waddle held his seat in our Assembly till the winter of 1840-41. Of course, he was ready to lend his influence for such a Bill, as would make the whole State the hunting ground for runaway slaves. Thus, southerners were going to compel us to catch their slaves for them, and a slaveholder was legislating in our Assembly for this purpose, and they were pushing their measures to make free Ohio a slaveholding State.

To such southern dictation the people of South Ridge strongly maintained their opposition. They rejected all the "Black Code" which made distinction on account of color, with disdain. They regarded them as a libel on the Declaration of American Independence, and at war with God and humanity. Such could be enactments, but not law, for, according to Blackstone, nothing can be law, but such legislative authority as accords with Divine Revelation and the law of Nature. No other human legislation can be of any force. Hence, they were bound to violate these enactments and obey the Divine, and Nature's law. These two things they resolved to do and suffer the consequences.

The Bible Fugitive Slave Law they sought to observe to the letter. It reads as follows: "Thou shalt not deliver unto his master the servant which is escaped from his master unto thee: he shall dwell with thee, even among you, in the place which he shall choose in one of thy gates, where it liketh him best: thou shalt not oppress him." Deut. xxi:15,16.

UNDERGROUND RAILROAD

The Underground Railroad was a name given to an overland route from the slave states on which the fugitives could escape from southern bondage to Canada. It had stopping places at intervals of five, ten or twenty miles apart, called depots, at which places the slave could find friends, who would shelter, feed, clothe, and contribute money to help him on his way to freedom. This boasted land of liberty in the United States, held four millions of human beings in the most abject slavery the world ever knew, and to gain their inalienable rights, they were compelled to flee into the British Dominion where a limited monarchy bore rule.

Tracks of the underground railroad became numerous both east and west of South Ridge. Friends to the poor slave seem providentially to have sprung up all through the Northern States, who dared, like Daniel and three worthies, to violate a human and wicked law and suffer the penalty, provided unjust rulers should inflict it, rather than do violence to their conscience and disobey the divine. The depots along the route with which we became most familiar, centered at the old Quaker's Jacob Heaton and brothers, in Salem, Columbiana county, Ohio. Thence to Hon. Leicester King, Warren, Trumbull county; thence to the house of George Hazelop, a merchant in

Gustavus; thence to Seth Hazes, merchant, and Ralph Plumb, Esq., in Hartford and Vernon; thence to Deacon Carpenter and Ansel K. Garlick, in Andover; thence to Albert Kellogg, Sidney S. Bushnell, and Samuel Hayward, now President of Conneaut bank at Kelloggsville; thence to M. W. Wright and Rev. Rufus Clark of South Ridge. If the slave was hotly pursued, and it was necessary to elude the grasp of his master by change from a direct line, and it was deemed best to go to Canada by way of Cleveland or by Detroit, he was directed to the home of J. R. or Stephen Gage in Sheffield, or Ira Taft, in Kingsville, or Jacob Austin in Austinburg, or William Hubbard in Ashtabula. But if the course by Buffalo was esteemed the safer, then to the house of William and David Gould in Springfield, Pa. Sometimes it became necessary, not only to change from a direct line, but to run backward and forward, to escape the fearful hand of the taskmaster. If a runaway was captured and taken back into slavery he was sometimes burned by cutting off his limbs and parts of his body and casting them into the fire, or at other times, with pine knots. Sometimes he would be shot. At other times he would be hitched to a horse, and dragged at a running speed, over the sharp stones and rough ground. In some horrible way they were to be put to death, and the friends along the underground railway took every precaution to prevent such an awful fate. They would, out of mercy to the slave and respect to the divine law, expose themselves to mobs and penalties of a cruel and slaveholding people. They rejoiced more to be right with the few than wrong with the many. They had learned not to care what public opinion was, for during the last hundred years it had been fearfully wrong on the question of American slavery. To give the reader some tangible idea of the work of this underground railroad we will mention a few instances.

Lewis Clark, a slave who had escaped from his master in Kentucky, came along one of these underground railroads in the western part of Ashtabula county. His master had taken him into a covered carriage and was on his return south, when Hon. J. R. Giddings, of Jefferson, gave directions for a warrant to be issued by the attorney of the county under the Habeas Corpus law, put into the hands of the Sheriff, John Prentiss, with instructions to serve it and bring the body of Lewis Clark forthwith, if found within the limits of Ashtabula county. The Sheriff overtook Lewis and his master on the county line road between Harpersfield in Ashtabula county, and Madison, in Lake county. But that there should be no question about the legality of the arrest, the road was partially blockaded on the West side, so that the carriage containing the fugitive would be compelled to turn out on the Ashtabula county side, and be wholly within the county limits. At this point the team was stopped and the Sheriff served his papers and took the body of Lewis Clark without leave or license of the master, and brought him to Jefferson, where he was set free. Being at liberty he came with a direct line to the house of M. W. Wright at South Ridge, where he found shelter, food, and means to help him on his way. He soon began to tell the story of his enslavement, his capture by his master, and his escape, and became one of the most eloquent speakers of Nature's sons. Thus he was saved from the torture and death of the runaway.

PART XXVIII.

Saturday afternoon, April 25, 1857, there came to the house of Rev. Rufus Clark, South Ridge, a young colored man, a negro with American features, very much frightened, as he said slaveholders were in close pursuit, and they might drive up any moment. Quieting his fears somewhat, we learned that he was about 21 years old, and was the son of his master, Hon. John Perkins, of New Orleans, La., was his body servant, and had been his master's waiter in his travels to Kansas and other states in the Union. His name was George Perkins. His master took him to Washington, D.C. to wait on him during sitting of Congress. During his stay there Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe called him to her room to tell her of any captured slaves that he had seen burned for running away. At the time of his escape, his master, Hon. Mr. Perkins, had come to visit Senator Thompson in Kentucky, and George thought this a favorable time to gain his freedom, and started for London, Canada West, guided by the North Star. On retiring to rest, George showed us a number of scars inflicted by his master and mistress. One on his arm with a shovel, another on his breast with a butcher knife, another on his head with a sharp cornered stick, all plain to be seen. George stayed with us until Monday, when we took him in our carriage and conveyed him to David Gould's in Springfield, Pa. and he went on his way to Canada, by way of Buffalo.

December 11th, 1854, a colored man, Stephen Pharis and his wife were noticed on a cold snowy day, wading through deep drifts along the road by Corwin Payne's, Mr. Bailey's, Mr. Ward's, Howard's Corners, Alonzo Ward's, L.M. Horton's and Brooks'. As he traveled faster than she, when he had reached two or three rods in advance, he would stop and wait for her to come up with him. They were thinly clad and foot-sore. They stopped for the night in an old forsaken house across the way from George Miles' barn, not owned by Wm. Thompson. It was the third house in which they had stopped since they left Fredericksburg, Va., some three months before. Every other night, , notwithstanding the severity of the weather, they had encamped in the woods, outhouses or barns. Mr. Miles seeing a light in his old shell of a house, went to learn the cause and found these half-starved, half-clothed, pitiable objects, who for liberty, were enduring all this suffering. As the fugitive slave law - in full force - forbid any Ohio person harboring, feeding, clothing, aiding or abetting, under severe penalties, Mr. Miles hardly dared to feed or make them comfortable for the night. He did, however, proffer his aid. The negro had broken some bits of rails to kindle a fire in the old fire place, and Mr. M. returned to his house, where his wife filled a pan with provisions, and brought it half way and set it down in the road for the sufferers who were to come for it. Thus they were supplied for the night.

The South Ridge Ladies Aid Society that day convened at Silas Wilders, who then lived in a house now owned by D. W. Hayward, learning of the facts, set themselves to work to render the despised couple comfortable. They collected material for making some articles of clothing, with second-hand dresses, coats, etc., and visited them in the old house. When told that they laid themselves liable to be arrested and confined to jail, for violating the Fugitive Slave Law, they responded simultaneously that they should all go together, and would most cheerfully suffer for such deeds of mercy. If the government was going to punish them for disobeying the divine law and the dictates of their own consciences, they would like to know it immediately and they would be ready purposely to violate such law and accept of fines and imprisonments.

The colored man, Stephen, was born in Maryland, and at that time was 26 years old, but never knew who his parents were. The woman, Mary, was 23. He had been a body servant, and she had been a chamber maid. The reason assigned for not crossing the Niagara River at Buffalo, into Canada, was too many slaveholders were at that time watching that passage, to render an attempt safe. Hence, they turned their course toward Detroit, and were traveling the whole length of Lake Erie in the cold bleak winds and snows of winter. What an undertaking this was for those poor ignorant sufferers, to leave the Sunny South and attempt this passage from slavery to liberty!

Many more instances of similar character might be given, which occurred during the pastorate of Rev. Rufus Clark - from 1851 to 1861. At one time three negroes came on Saturday and stayed until Sunday afternoon, when one of our citizens in an express took them to William Gould's, Springfield, Pa. Hon. Samuel Hayward, president of Conneaut Bank, tells us of five colored men from slavery that stayed in his house in Kelloggsville from Saturday till Monday. They were then directed to Augustus Abbott's, and thence to the Gould neighborhood, in Springfield, Pa.

In Canada as an instance of the safe arrival of the fugitives, on the underground railroad, we will mention a circumstance that occurred in the summer of 1849. Captain Austin Shepard, a resident of Ashtabula, was that season running the steamer Cleveland, from Cleveland to Port Stanley, and other ports on the Canada side of Lake Erie and carrying freight to all points. One day six colored men reached that city and were safely enconced on board ship. Three slaveholders had struck their track and were in hot pursuit, assuming to be their owners. They just reached the pier just as the boat was to loose from its moorings and sail. They demanded their slave property and forbid the captain leaving the harbor. Captain Shepard told them they could search the ship as he had no knowledge of there being any slave property on board. The time having arrived for him to sail, the Mate, John Kimburgh, cut the ropes, and while the slaveholders were talking with the captain in the cabin, the boat had made out to sea and they could not get off. The negroes had been locked in the state-room and could not be reached, but when the slaveholders showed their anger and disposition to fight, the captain ordered them in and locked them up with the negroes. Hence they were compelled to ride in the same room subject to the same fare as their slaves. But a more enraged class of men never sailed on Lake Erie. They were mad enough to shake with excitement. On sailing into port on the Canadian shore, Captain Shepard unlocked the stateroom door and said to the colored men, "Now you are on free soil, and as you have paid your fare, you are now free men, and can go where you please." To their masters he said, "If you will pay your fare, you can be free men, and go where you please, either stay in Canada or return to the States." They wished to return to their homes in the South, and did not leave the boat. Stepping on shore the slaves gave three cheers for their liberty, and three cheers for their masters. Then uttering a few parting words, they sent back their best respects to their old cronies in slave labor, telling the slaveholdres to say to their slaves that they had reached Canada, and their masters had sailed with them across Lake Erie, and had seen them safely over. Thus they bid them good by, and took their course in free Canada, to seek employment as a means of support.

PART XXIX.

Political action for the overthrow of American slavery began to be considered important in 1835, but the decision to make it State and National was not settled until 1840. Neither of the great parties, Whigs or Democrats, dared to copy into their platforms any anti-slavery principle, and to start the "Third Party", with here and there a scattering vote and, knowing that they would be compelled for years to hold on without electing a single officer, looked like a tremendous task. It was too great an undertaking for any but the most earnest and courageous workers. At length these few saw that there was no hope of gaining their object in any other way than to make a direct issue with the accursed evil. Many sincerely wished slavery destroyed and did not like to vote to perpetuate it, but wished to evade the question. They tried to think that the North had nothing to do with the system. They resorted to every argument to persuade themselves that it was meddling with that which did not belong to us to attempt to rid the nation of this malady. But the ever returning fact made every American citizen feel that, "if one member suffered, all suffered with it." If two families lived in one house and one family's part was on fire, it would not be esteemed meddling with that which did not concern the other if he should proffer his help to put it out. Even though the one in the burning part should delight to see his burn, it would not make the other rest satisfied that he had nothing to do with it immediately, meddling or not meddling. He would make it his first duty to know that his own part was safe, by destroying the element which would consume them both.

The South was ever and anon reiterating the words, "hands off" "let us alone", "ours is a domestic institution and we are able to manage it to suit ourselves." But this is the feeling of every criminal, when perpetrating his worst deeds. The burglar enters your dwelling, takes your watch, your money, your silverware, and goods, and departs, saying, "hands off," "let me alone." The horse thief takes your best span and drives away with your carriage and laughs while uttering the words, "hands off," "let me alone." The robber says, "dead men tell no tales," and takes your money and riding w ay in triumph exclaims, "hands off," "let me alone." But this was the very thing our South Ridge Anti-slavery men had resolved not to do. They intended to follow them with moral suasion, as long as that would avail anything, and then take up "legal suasion," and political action. They had not undertaken this abolition work in boy's play. It was a matter involving great principles, and to be carried out to the utmost extent. Because slavery was hedged about by law, State rights and money-making powers if it was the blackest crime the sun ever looked upon, it was to be ferrited out and put down. If they could impress the children of ten years with the responsibilities of their calling to redeem the nation from this curse, they would not cease their efforts until the work was done. This was their object, and in this they were successful.

To form a great national, political party, that should have for its leading object the destruction of slavery in the United States, was the thought for which the liberty-loving men bent their energies. It was among the smallest of enterprises in the beginning. Like a grain of mustard seed, it seemed least of all. It took its rise during the summer of 1840, when the Whig party called to the front Gen. Wm. Henry Harrison, as candidate for the presidency, and the Democrats, Hon. Martin Van Buren. The organization of anti-slavery men was called the "Liberty Party". For a change political men called it the "Third Party". At the October election for governor, there was one Liberty vote cast, the first in Conneaut township, and this was the ballot of Diocletion Wright. In Ashtabula county there were fourteen, entitled scattering. The Liberty Party candidate for the presidency was James G. Birney, of New York, for vice president, Thomas Earle, of Pa. Mr. Birney was a Whig in politics, and while living in Kentucky was a slaveholder claiming twenty-seven as his property. But becoming an abolitionist he brought them into a free state and set them at liberty. At the presidential election in November, James G. Birney received from South Ridge three votes, Diocletian Wright, Ralph Wright and Dana Jacobs. In Monroe there were four votes cast for Mr. Birney, viz., by Martin Kellogg, Robert McMellen, Albert Kellogg, and Luther Dean. In Ohio there were 903 anti-slavery votes. In the United States the Liberty candidate received 6,414. Small as it was, it alarmed the South, for they saw in it the beginning of a party that was to triumph. It was the Moses that was to lead the children of African descent into freedom. The other parties made little impression compared to this. In 1844, when Henry Clay and James K. Polk were candidates, the former a Whig and the latter a Democrat, the Liberty party put into the fold J. G. Birney, now of Michigan, for president, and Thomas Morris of Ohio for vice president. At this time South Ridge, which was called New Guiana, had made great advances, and gave a majority of votes for the Liberty candidate. In the State there was an advance to 8050, and in the United States to 62,127.

This political action began and grew even while anti-slavery societies were moulding public sentiment with moral suasion. While the object has ever been the same, viz., to ameliorate the condition of the slave and give him self-possession, Anti-slavery men have served under different names. In 1848 the Liberty Party, formed eight years before, was absorbed to the Free Soil Party. After eight years longer, the Free Soil Party was absorbed in the Republican, which continues to the present time. There are those at South Ridge who have grown into political rank, that never voted with a pro-slavery party. From the beginning of their civil life they have cast ballots with the Liberty, Free Soil and Republican principles.

The Free Baptist Church has never tolerated pro-slavery principles in its membership. Both the pulpit and the pew have ever been in such strong sympathy for the oppressed that it would be uncomfortable for any person of opposite sentiment to live with them. Rev. F. W. Straight, from time to time reminded his congregation of the divine call to "proclaim liberty to the captive," that they "loose the bands of wickedness, undo the heavy burdens, and let the oppressed go free," and that they "break every yoke."

May 3rd 1857, Rev. Rufus Clark preached a sermon on the "Higher Law", in which he took the position that whenever human laws contravened the Divine it was man's duty to violate those laws in obedience to the Divine. The discourse was published in the Conneaut Reporter. He also preached the funeral sermon of Captain John Brown, executed by order of Governor Wise, at Charleston Va., Dec. 2nd, and of his four associates, John E. Cook, Edward Coppie, and two colored men, Shields Green, and John A. Copeland, on the 16th of the same month, 1859, for the attempt at Harper's Ferry, Virginia, to open the way of escape to the slaves. After delivering this sermon at South Ridge, the people of Pierpont called for it to be preached to them, which was accordingly done the next Sabbath.

PART XXX.

These are a few specimens of the work that went on in our place for more than 20 years, and until the war of the Rebellion in 1861. Then came the enlistments in the service from our Bible classes and citizens, men of staunch moral character, true patriotism and daring bravery. A nobler corps of soldiers never responded to our country's call, in the hour of danger. They were temperate, honest and truthful. They were reliable in the field. In the day of battle our gallant boys never ran, but stood at their post, or were shot down in their tracks. They gave their lives for their country, in this last great baptism of blood, and American freedom triumphed over the galling yoke of slavery. It gave us the second edition of our independence, at the very moment when oppressors were aiming a death blow at the heart of the Great Republic, Liberty triumphed and Secession and Rebellion fell before our conquering armies, and our South Ridge boys bore their share in the honorable contest.

CONCLUSION

With an appendix supplying omissions, making corrections, and adding some facts which have come to light during the publishing of these sketches of the Early History of the South Ridge, which are to follow this paper, our work will be done.

And now my indulgent readers, you have a faint word picture of the stern realities of life in a new country. We have taken you back three-fourths of a century, and set you down in a dense forest infested with wild beasts where not a thing of art was known. The earth, wilderness and sky was all that met the eye. All was nature's work.

They were heroes who dared to venture into such a thicket and strike the first blows for a settlement. Reflections on the sufferings and toils of our fathers and mothers, should support us under our burdens and stimulate us to become more deserving occupants of their dearly bought homes. We should labor to prove ourselves the worthy descendants of such parentage. No part of our country can boast of a more noble and honored ancestry, than the people of South Ridge. Trained in the steady habits of New England, their children were brought up with Puritan care. They wrought for pure hearts, dignified families, advanced schools, pious churches, free citizens and a noble nation.

It has been no small task to collect the materials and write this mass of facts, during the last sixteen weeks, which have been published at the rate of two columns in each issue of the Conneaut Reporter. Nor has it been much less a tax on the patience of the editor and his compositors to put it into type. But we are glad it is done. It was needful to have it accomplished soon or the matter composing these sketches would go beyond our reach. Only a few old residents remain to tell their stories, and when they shall have gone, all the past of our place would be left in obscurity. It is about the last opportunity anyone could have for such an object. And now, on taking leave of the subject, we would ask the reader to supply the omissions where he is apprised of omissions, to correct mistakes, and, if possible, feel glad that so few errors have crept into the manuscripts, which has been so difficult a task to write.

The temperance question was not extensively agitated in the United States until after the organization of the American Temperance Society, Feb. 13, 1826. At this time the general sentiment prevailed that the use of alcoholic drinks as a beverage was useful. It was supposed to give courage, ambition and strength. The intoxicating draft was called "Aqua Vitae" or "Water of Life." It had such power to deceive that men thought that it possessed qualities directly opposite to its real nature, for instead of being useful, it was injurious, and so far from being the water of life, it proved to be the water of death.

The early settlers had accepted the delusion that it paid to drink whisky, and hence all esteemed it as necessary as tea and coffee. It was sold for twenty-five cents per gallon. Men took it by the glass, the youth by the swallow and the babe by the teaspoon. It was deemed necessary in sickness to cure; in health to preserve it; in cold weather to warm up; in hot weather to cool off; in sheep-washing to prevent colds; in haying and harvesting to contribute strength; at raising, to contribute a steady hand on holidays to enjoy their independence; in company to be social; and on every occasion, because they liked it. At that time none realized that the serpent was in the cup. At the raising of the first barn frame, 1820, at P. C.'s one of our citizens remembers that at that time, he, a boy of eight years, got drunk. One other instance of which we have heard, a similar case occurred with a boy about 9 years old, but we do not remember one drunken sot at South Ridge.

About 1828 temperance lecturers began to visit these parts and stir up the public mind on the evil of the use of intoxicating liquors. One of the first who gave a temperance address was Dr. Greenleaf Fifield, father of Dr. Amos K. Fifield of Conneaut. He read the testimony of able physicians on the evil effect of ardent spirits on the constitutions of men who drank. Men pondered on the subject, and after a short time a temperance society was organized, auxiliary to the American Temperance Society of Boston, Mass.

People generally signed the pledge, and we have never known a confirmed inebriate, nor a public place for the sale of intoxicating liquors at South Ridge. A more temperate and orderly class of people, in these parts has never grown to manhood - none that have ever been more trustworthy and reliable.

The South Ridge vigilance committee was one of the best, if not the best, organizations for the protection of our citizens against thieves ever known in these parts. Gangs of men had systematized plans for stealing horses, carriages, stock, goods, and all kinds of property, so skillfully, causing them to change hands so frequently that it rendered a single-handed people unable to get any trace of them. One of these desperadoes would take the property, another convey it away, another secrete it, and still some of the gang be about the town watching every effort for search, and then give information to their comrades in crime. The people of South Ridge resolved on an association which would protect themselves against such lawless bands.

At a meeting held Jan. 21, 1860 they took measures to form a compact. Feb. 4 they met and adopted a constitution and by-laws, and Feb. 11, they met again and chose their officers. For president, Eber Sanford; for vice-presidents, Elisha Farnham, Edward C. Brooks, Isaac Stevens and B. B. Smith, Esq. For Secretary, J. Q. Burrington; For treasurer, Thomas Gibson; Captain, Stephen Daniels; Lieutenants, W. G. Buss, Horace Cook; Minute-men, A. Durkee, A. Richards, W.G. Smith, O. D. Shepard, Joel Couch, L. Evarts, D. Green, W. H. Cheney, G. W. Phelps, and Thomas Bunton. The number of signers at this time was 33, and the territory over which they extended jurisdiction was South Ridge and its vicinity. But the Vigilance Committee has grown to such dimensions as to reach a membership of 247, scattered over Conneaut, Monroe, Kingsville, Springfield, Pa., and as much of Conneaut, Pa. as lies west of the Erie & Pittsburgh Railroad. Applications have been made for membership by men living outside of these limits, but thus far it has been thought not best to accept them, as they might not be able to extend protection sufficiently faithful. The society has cash in bank $204.94. PART XXXI.

The present officers of the society are as follows: President, B. B. Smith; Vice-presidents, E. Dorman, E. C. Heading, R. Washburn, and H.S. Hewit; Treasurer, Henry Frack, Secretary, O. G. Clark; Captain, Abner Scott; First Lieut., Wm. Hogle; 2nd Lieut., Alden Pomroy; Minute-men, D. C. Turner, F. M. Darling, A. Durkee, Jonathan Spaulding, D. W. Hayward, Patrick Kennedy, Philo Green, Stephen Daniels, C. F. Colby, and S. B. Buss.

Such a strong organization has operated as a terror to evil doers. We are informed that, though many horses have been stolen from outsiders, only one instance of horse stealing from one of the members has yet been committed. Such a criminal would have a dozen men after him in so short a time that he would be overtaken in less than 24 hours. The captain with his company of lieutenants and minute-men stand pledged to start at a moment's warning.

APPENDIX

We have not yet obtained all the corrections and additions which will be necessary to make, but if the sketches should be published in book form, the typographical and other corrections will be made then. Some names have been omitted, but these will be added in their proper places. We shall keep the way open for all these improvements for weeks to come, or until the whole matter goes to press. If some two hundred and fifty subscribers can be obtained at one dollar each, our publishers tell us they will issue the work.

The Montgomery family were the first to locate in Conneaut, 1798. Robert Montgomery and wife, his oldest son, James, who had married this sister of David Baldwin, his two daughters, Sally, who became the wife of Captain Harper, and Anna, who became the wife of Aaron Wright, then a young man, constituted the first family. They moved into the "Stow Castle" at the mouth of Conneaut creek.

James, Sr., bought the Christopher Ford farm, where he lived a number of years, then sold to Mr. Ford and removed with his father, Robert Montgomery, to Austinburg, thence to Saybrook, thence to Ash-tabula, where he died. Robert, Sr., his father, returned to Conneaut to live with his daughter, Mrs. Aaron Wright. Mr. Wright built a house for him on the corner of Main and Mill streets, where now resides Captain C. W. Appleby. At this house of Grandfather Robert Montgomery, the Presbyterian Church was organized in 1819.

James, Jr., son of James, Sr., went to Kansas, and in the army of the Grand Republic, 1861-65, he became Colonel of a colored regiment and firmly maintained the Union cause to the last. At the close of the war he returned to his home in Kansas, where he died.

Robert Montgomery, Jr., was a preacher in the M. E. Church, and did not come to Ohio until much later than his father and brothers.

The brothers of Aaron Wright, Esq. did not come to Ohio until 1815-20. There were six in his father's family, viz: Eli Smith, Deric, Jonathan and Ebenezer, the youngest, who never came here. Nor did the four who followed Aaron to Conneaut long remain in the place. Eli went to Sandusky, O., Smith died in Lake County, O., Deric died in Michigan, Jonathan died in Seneca Co., O.

Aaron Wright first lived in the "Stow Castle" on the east side of the mouth of Conneaut Creek. Then in a log house on the Ford farm, then at the corner of Mill and Main streets, the present location of G. W. Cummings, then in a frame house which he built in 1814, on Main street, now the site of William D. Jennings' residence, where he remained until his death, which occurred Nov. 9, 1853.

Among the surroundings of our South Ridge settlers there was another family of whom we had not learned, which deserves an honor-mention for their early adventures in the wilderness. It was Daniel Sawtell, Sr., born in Maine, and while young removed to New Hampshire. Thence to Susquehanna, Pa.; thence to Springfield, Pa. and thence, in the spring of 1803, two and one-fourth miles west of the Center road on to the Clark Hunt farm, now owned by Geo. W. Howard, about a half mile south of Shipboy's Corners. Mr. Sawtell bought lands of the Wadsworths who had purchased large tracts of the Connecticut Land Co. to sell again. Mr. Sawtell's family at that time consisted of four sons, Daniel Jr., David, Alpha, Wm. Gould, and two daughters, Esther and Myranda. Obadiah, Zyattu, Marvin M., James M. and Lovisa were born in Ohio. Mr. Sawtell remained on this farm eight and one-half years, then bought 200 acres north, lying on both sides of Conneaut creek, a part of which is now owned by his grandson, Daniel G. Sawtell. Daniel Sr. built on the present site of D. Cummin's Canning factory. In the winter of 1812-13 Mr. Sawtell was employed to take provisions to the soldiers at Cleveland and contracting a fever, died. His remains were buried on the lot where now is Weldon & Dabbitt's grocery store, across the street west of the Conneaut Bank Association. Daniel Sawtell, Jr., married and lived many years on the Clark Hunt farm, and was there in 1818. Hence, when Seth Thompson settled on the present John Howard farm, beside Judge King in Conneaut, John Law east of Bliss Corners, and David Files on the Wm. Brydle place, there was Daniel Sawtell on the Geo. W. Howard farm. These being his nearest neighbors from two to three miles away.

Mrs. Jacobs was born in 1801 and with her father moved to South Ridge in 1803, and has probably resided the longest on the Western Reserve of any person living. She is now 79 years old, enjoys good health and retains her mental powers remarkably well.

Abraham Bennett of Vermont, visited Ohio in 1812 to look at land, and returning, he traded his 45 acres in Vt. for four hundred acres lying on both sides of Conneaut Creek, east and south of David Niles, and included lands now owned by Walker S. Bennett, D. W. Hayward, Geo. Colby, George A. Ring, William Hardy, and others, and four hundred and forty-five dollars cash. The next year, 1813, Mr. Bennett sent his two sons, Isaac with his family, and Daniel, not married, to settle these lands. To Isaac he gave 45 acres and a yoke of oxen, and he moved into the Spooner house about 20 rods northwest of Walker S. Bennett's present residence, and set out an orchard that still remains. In 1819 Daniel married and built his house on the corner where George A. Ring now lives and his father gave him 50 acres and a yoke of oxen. Later, Orvil came and took land east of Daniel, worked a few months and was killed, of whom we have given account elsewhere.

PART XXXII.

June 18, 1828, Abram Bennett, with others of his family, his son, Nathan B. Bennett and family arrived. Mr. Bennett, two older daughters, Fanny and Anna, married in Connecticut. The two younger ones, Emma and Miranda came with him. The former soon returned and married in Ct. and the latter became Mrs. George Barrett, of Kingsville. Nathan B. Bennett moved on to Orcil's place and the other son, Ezra H., went to Iowa.

John Haviland, from Vt. came to Conneaut in the fall of 1816, and stopped during the winter, where now is the Gore road near Amboy. March 1, 1817, he moved on to the farm where now resides Augustus Horton, one and one-fourth miles east of Kent's Corners, Monroe, and about one mile west of Clark's Corners. He purchased one hundred acres and began to clear a few acres by his house. Mr. Haviland's nearest neighbor on the east was Jeremiah Bush, three miles in Pennsylvania, and the nearest one on the west was David Niles, two miles and a half away, where now resides Wm. Brydel. He could not neighbor with Lemuel Jones, because there was no way to get across Conneaut creek. Mr. Haviland's oldest and youngest children, who were both boys, died in infancy. His five daughters married as follows: Miss Mary Ann married Asa Fuller; Miss Sally, Alvin Huntley; Miss Betsey S., Chas. Brown; Miss Laura M., Lewis A. Thayer; Miss Augusta A., Augustus H. Horton. Mr. Haviland was one of the men employed on the race-way of Eli Sanford's mill in company with Theophilus Sanborn and John Eaton.

Danville Hayward, of Vt., came to Amboy in the fall of 1816, where he remained until the next June, 1817. He bought the lot of land lying east of Mr. Haviland, with whom he exchanged farms, bringing his between Mr. Haviland and Mr. Abbott. Mr. Hayward lived for several years in a log house and then built the two-story house, now the residence of Augustus H. Horton. Later he sold, and with his son, William, who is now the assessor of Conneaut, bought the farm now owned by D. W. Hayward, one mile west of South Ridge post office.

In 1820 Dana Jacobs came to Conneaut and bought of Judge Roger Skinner, of York State, the farm where his widow, Mrs. Esther Jacobs, and her son Freedom, and daughter, Alice, now live. Mr. Jacobs paid $3.00 per acre, then a dense forest.

In the fall of 1826, Luke Thayer, Sr. father of Luke, Jr., Lewis and John, came. Mr. Thayer bought the farm now owned by Captain Goldsmith, two miles west of the post office. Already it had passed through several hands. Leonard Niles, son of David, purchased it of Gen. Wadsworth, and began a clearing. Mr. Niles sold to John Fox, and Mr. Fox to Mr. Thayer. Olen Thayer, another son of Luke Thayer, came some years later, worked at tailoring in Conneaut for some time, after which he purchased the farm recently sold by N. W. Bartlett to the Pierce boys.

Joslin Ring moved the same time, 1828, in company, bringing a family of three daughters, Mary A., Lydia, and Angeline, and four sons, Almon, John, Eleazer, and Lewis. Mr. Ring bought of Reuben Sanborn, the farm now owned by D. W. Hayward. In due time Mr. and Mrs. Ring died and all the children went west except Almon, who remained, making several removals, having his children settled in life not far from the homestead.

Mrs. Patch, one of Luke Thayer's daughters, with her family, came with him. Heman and Truman were boys 12 and 10 years old, grew to manhood and settled in life. Alsina remained with her mother until she married Earl Pierce.

Daniel Hatch after living at Hatch's Corners, now Kent's, 12 years, sold to Garrison Hunt, Mr. Hunt to Samuel Eaton. Mr. Hatch moved to Jonesville, in Michigan, but being so homesick, he returned without unloading his goods, to Conneaut, where he was variously employed until his death, which occurred March 13, 1867. His three older children, Calvin, Andrew S. and Eliza, died at the ages of 22, 11, and 53. His surviving sons are, Rufus H., John Q.A.; Edwin R., Hiram K., and Frederick L., all married and living in Conneaut, with the exception of John Q.A., who resides in Michigan. Mr. Hatch's widow still survives at the advanced age of 87 years. Among the first official duties which Mr. Hatch, as Justice of the Peace, performed, was to marry Elisha Farnham to Miss Mary A. Ring, Nov. 14, 1833. Some of his funny counsel to the bride was, never to set a round piece of butter on the table during cold weather, for starvation would be sure to follow.

INCIDENTS.

At the time the Wright families came to Conneaut October 13, 1811, there were 80 families in town. These at the rate of three persons to each, would make a population of about two hundred and forty.

The first white woman who crossed Conneaut creek where is now Parnham's mill. was Mrs. Ezekiel Olds. She went with an ox team, she riding one ox and her husband the other.

From Dec. 25, 1811, to March 1, 1812, the snow was deep and the winter severe. While cutting and splitting wood Sherman Wright cut his foot very badly, and was confined to his home six weeks. During this time his wife gave birth to one of her children, and no physician or help could be called.

In the fall of 1814 one man in Conneaut made thirty barrels of cider and sold it for $10 a barrel. Salt was sold for $20 per barrel, wheat at $1.50 per bushel, and corn from 75¢ to $1.00 per bushel.

Introduction to Mathematics

The first step in learning mathematics is to understand the basic concepts and terminology.

Mathematics is a language that describes the world around us.

One of the most important concepts in mathematics is the number system. The number system is a set of numbers that are used to represent quantities and relationships.

The number system is divided into two main parts: the natural numbers and the integers. The natural numbers are the numbers 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and so on. The integers are the numbers 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and so on, including the negative numbers.

The natural numbers are used to count objects and measure length. The integers are used to represent temperature, altitude, and other quantities that can be positive or negative.

The number system is also used to represent fractions and decimals. Fractions are used to represent parts of a whole, and decimals are used to represent numbers that are not whole.

The number system is a fundamental part of mathematics, and it is used in many different ways. It is used to describe the world around us, to solve problems, and to communicate with others.

Introduction

The purpose of this document is to provide a comprehensive overview of the project's objectives, scope, and timeline. It is intended for use by all stakeholders involved in the project, including the project manager, team members, and sponsors.

This document will serve as a reference point for the project team throughout its duration. It will be updated as the project progresses and new information becomes available.

Project Objectives

The primary objective of this project is to develop a new software application that will streamline the company's internal processes. The project is expected to be completed within a budget of $100,000 and a timeline of 12 months.

The project team has identified several key milestones that must be achieved in order to successfully complete the project. These milestones include the completion of the requirements gathering phase, the development of the software application, and the deployment of the application to the production environment.

The project team has also identified several risks that could potentially impact the project's success. These risks include the possibility of budget overruns, delays in the development process, and the potential for user resistance to the new application.

The project team has developed a detailed project plan that outlines the tasks to be performed, the resources required, and the timeline for each task. This plan will be used to monitor the project's progress and to ensure that the project is completed on time and within budget.

The project team has also developed a communication plan that outlines the methods and frequency of communication between the project team and the project's stakeholders. This plan will ensure that all stakeholders are kept informed of the project's progress and that any issues are identified and resolved in a timely manner.

The project team has also identified several key performance indicators (KPIs) that will be used to measure the project's success. These KPIs include the project's budget, the project's timeline, and the user satisfaction with the new application.

The project team has also identified several key stakeholders who will be involved in the project. These stakeholders include the project manager, the project team, the project's sponsors, and the project's end users.

The project team has also identified several key risks that could potentially impact the project's success. These risks include the possibility of budget overruns, delays in the development process, and the potential for user resistance to the new application.

A newspaper clipping in the 1818 Pickett Bible reads as follows:

"DIED - At Andover, Ashtabula County, Ohio on the 23rd day of October, 1840, JOHN PICKET , Esq. in the 87th year of his age.

*From the commencement of the Revolutionary War, to the close of it, he performed his share of service, as a soldier in the Army of the United States; Was a member of the Massachusetts Convention for the adoption of the Federal Constitution. After that he was a Representative in the Legislature of Massachusetts until federalism confined him to private life for five years, on account of his democracy: He was again elected a Representative in the Legislature of Massachusetts for a number of years; He left Massachusetts in 1819 and came to Ohio. He was a political friend of Washington, Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, and John Q. Adams; also, of Clay, Webster and Harrison. - He was a Whig in arms, in sight of, but not in, Bunker Hill battle, and a Whig at the ballot box in after days. He retained his mental powers, and died cheerfully in hope of a peaceful immortality."

PICKETT FAMILY

Manuscript in Pickett Family Bible, written by Caroline (Williams) Pickett.

"1882. Married in Kingsville July 8, 1852, at the home of the bride, Solymon C. Osborn's, Caroline M. Williams to Aaron Pickett of Andover, Ohio.

There were about 40 guests among whom were the bride's grandmother Williams, aged 82 years and her grandmother Sanford 79 years of age and Uncle Osborn's mother, whom we always called Grandmother Webster, 70 years old.

It was not as customary then as now to give presents, but the bride rec'd a fan, a nice handkerchief and a watch and chain from the groom. They were married by Rev. Beach of Kelloggsville, but most of his life was in Andover.

One circumstance, after we had been away teaching a year, and were home for vacation, we had some of our wedding cake.

Hattie B. Pickett sister of Asron, was married to Farmer R. Livermore in Andover, at Joseph Pickett's July 8, 1852 in the morning and Aaron at Kingsville at evening of the same. There were 40 or more guests, mostly relatives.

Lina (Emeline) married at Mary's Oct. 3, 1900 to Jerome Britt.

Mary Pickett married William Stearns June 28, 1893

Cornelia Hulbert was 7 years younger than Caroline, who was born in February, 1826.

(Note by Florence M. Perry, granddaughter of Cornelia. Cornelia Williams was the sister of Caroline (Williams) Pickett. She married 1st William Recse, 2nd Joseph D. Hulbert. William Reese and Cornelia (Williams) Reese were the parents of my mother, Catherine Sanford (Reese) Perry).

On separate paper:

"At Mary's July 8, 1908. In bed at 8:00 A.M.

Carrie M. Williams and Asron Pickett were married at Uncle Osborns in Kingsville July 8, 1852. There were 40 there, mostly cousins.

Mary Collier Pickett was born July 8th, 1872 in Ashtabula, the youngest of six children, celebrating the 20th anniversary of their marriage.

They (Caroline and Aaron) came to live with William and Mary Stearns April 1st, 1909. Good years they have been.

Brother Julius Williams died May 18, 1901, was buried his birthday, May 20th.

Sister Cornelia Williams Reese Hulbert died March 27, 1902.

CHAPTER 1

The first part of the book is devoted to a general discussion of the subject.

In the second part, we shall consider the various methods of solution.

The third part is devoted to the study of the properties of the solutions.

In the fourth part, we shall discuss the applications of the theory to the solution of problems.

The fifth part is devoted to the study of the properties of the solutions.

In the sixth part, we shall consider the various methods of solution.

The seventh part is devoted to the study of the properties of the solutions.

In the eighth part, we shall discuss the applications of the theory to the solution of problems.

The ninth part is devoted to the study of the properties of the solutions.

In the tenth part, we shall consider the various methods of solution.

The eleventh part is devoted to the study of the properties of the solutions.

In the twelfth part, we shall discuss the applications of the theory to the solution of problems.

The thirteenth part is devoted to the study of the properties of the solutions.

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO
DEPARTMENT OF CHEMISTRY
RESEARCH REPORT

REPORT OF THE RESEARCH GROUP ON THE CHEMISTRY OF THE CARBON-13 ISOTOPE

The following is a summary of the work done by the research group on the chemistry of the carbon-13 isotope during the year 1954. The work was carried out under the direction of Professor R. M. Waymouth and was supported by the National Science Foundation and the Office of Naval Research. The group has been studying the chemical behavior of the carbon-13 isotope in a variety of organic compounds, with particular emphasis on the study of the kinetics and mechanism of the reaction of carbon-13 labeled compounds with various reagents. The results of these studies have been published in the Journal of Organic Chemistry and the Journal of the American Chemical Society. The work has also been presented at the American Chemical Society meeting in New York City, 1954, and at the International Symposium on Macromolecular Chemistry in Prague, 1954. The group is currently studying the reaction of carbon-13 labeled compounds with various reagents, and the results of these studies will be published in the near future.

The following is a list of the publications of the research group on the chemistry of the carbon-13 isotope during the year 1954. The list is arranged in alphabetical order of the authors' names. The first author of each publication is indicated by a boldface letter. The year of publication is indicated by a number in parentheses. The title of each publication is indicated by a boldface letter. The journal or book in which the publication appeared is indicated by a number in parentheses. The volume and page numbers of the publication are indicated by a number in parentheses. The list of publications is as follows:

1. R. M. Waymouth, J. R. Durig, and J. H. Goldstein, J. Org. Chem., 19, 100 (1954).

2. J. R. Durig, R. M. Waymouth, and J. H. Goldstein, J. Org. Chem., 19, 101 (1954).

3. J. H. Goldstein, R. M. Waymouth, and J. R. Durig, J. Org. Chem., 19, 102 (1954).

4. R. M. Waymouth, J. R. Durig, and J. H. Goldstein, J. Am. Chem. Soc., 76, 100 (1954).

5. J. R. Durig, R. M. Waymouth, and J. H. Goldstein, J. Am. Chem. Soc., 76, 101 (1954).

6. J. H. Goldstein, R. M. Waymouth, and J. R. Durig, J. Am. Chem. Soc., 76, 102 (1954).

7. R. M. Waymouth, J. R. Durig, and J. H. Goldstein, J. Am. Chem. Soc., 76, 103 (1954).

8. J. R. Durig, R. M. Waymouth, and J. H. Goldstein, J. Am. Chem. Soc., 76, 104 (1954).

9. J. H. Goldstein, R. M. Waymouth, and J. R. Durig, J. Am. Chem. Soc., 76, 105 (1954).

10. R. M. Waymouth, J. R. Durig, and J. H. Goldstein, J. Am. Chem. Soc., 76, 106 (1954).

Lydia Williams my sister married Alfred Crittenden in Conneaut Ohio, raised a large family, died in 1884 aged about 75 years.

John W. Haskell, husband of Mary Ann died the 12 Nov. 1885 aged 73. Children all grown up.

Elvira Williams who was married to Abner Clark for her first husband had I think 4 children. He died and she was married again a number of years after her first husband's death. She died Sept. 24, 1887.

Diocletien Williams died at his home in Alhambra in Southern California on the 15th day of Feb. 1889 leaves a widow and 3 boys - died from cancer.

My father with his family moved from Massachusetts to Lewis County in the State of New York in 1805 or 6 near the Village of Lowville, at which place I was born. He lived there until 1816 (1811 ?) when he moved to what was called the Western Reserve, Ohio, at which place I staid on the Homestead until Oct. 1, 1828, when I left home and went to New York and the New England States on a visit to friends and relatives. Found my uncles and aunts also visited my grandfather Williams, living near Lee, Washington County. After visiting for some time and not finding employment to suit, I started to return by the way of Albany for Rochester. I arrived at Rochester Nov. 25, 1828 and stopped at Horace King's, whose wife was a relative of my mother's. I stopped there until the 20th July, 1829. Then went out in the country to Chili, worked in the harvest field until the 9th August. From there went to Lockport and worked on farm until the 4th Oct. Thence to Buffalo. Arrived there the 13th Oct. 1829 and engaged as clerk in store and lumber yard for S. Russell & Son and staid with them until the fall of 1832. Within the time I was with them I had a very hard fit of sickness. Not expected to live for some time. That was in the summer of 1831.

In April 1831 I was received into the Washington Street Baptist Church of Buffalo, N.Y.

Sept. 7, 1832, I purchased a small stock of dry goods of H. P. Russell, and commenced business for myself.

The 3rd December, 1832, married to Harriet W. Russell by Rev. S. Eaton, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Buffalo. We continued to board with Samuel Russell, wife's father.

In the summer of 1833 Henry Hill family arrived in Buffalo from South America. Mrs. Hill was sister to my wife. Mr. Hill was sent out as minister to Brazil by the Government - had been there for about 22 years. All but one of their children were born there. Anna Hill, one of the daughters, was taken sick in December 1833 with Typhoid fever, but recovered. Sarah Hill the oldest daughter on the 4th Feb. died.

Eliza Hill of same fever died the 28th Feb. 1834.

Esq. Brown died on the 14th Feb. cousin of my wife, who was living in the same house making 3 deaths within the month.

April 2, 1834 Antoinette T. our daughter, was born, a fine child and weighed 9 1/4 lbs when born.

July 2, 1834 Samuel Russell died and was buried on the 4th July 1834. His disease was enlargement of the liver.

I continued in business in Buffalo. During the year of 1837 and 1838 my wife was sick and we all supposed she had consumption. It was thought by her friends that a journey to New York City and New England states might benefit her health and on the 18th Oct. 1838, she with little Antoinette took passage on canal boat for New York, Antoinette being then about 4 1/2 years old. They spent the winter in New York City and in Connecticut and Massachusetts, and both returned to Buffalo May 5, 1839, with health improved and had a pleasant time all the winter and all appearance of consumption had disappeared.

Feb. 9, 1841, Antoinette, our only child died after a very severe attack of the croup. She was a beautiful and lovely girl.

Orvil Edgerton married Loisa Hill daughter of Henry & Lucy M. Hill. To them was born a son the 12 April 1846. He was named Albert Edgerton. After his Father and Mother died we adopted Albert as our son, and he was named Albert Adgarton Williams who continued with us as our son.

We sent Albert 20th June 1859 from Buffalo to Saint Clair, Scott County, Iowa to stop with his half-sister, Sarah A. Bordwell, who is now married to D. H. Bordwell, who is Pastor of the Congregational Church

On the 4th Oct. 1859 started from Buffalo, New York for Oregon by way of New York and the Isthmus and arrived in Portland Oregon, Nov. 7, 1859, and commenced work in a dry goods business.

Albert arrived in Portland April 1860.

Harrietta Wadsworth Russell, maiden name of my wife, born 1st day March 1794.

Harrietta Wadsworth Williams - died in Portland, Oregon, at house of Eliza Jane Thompson, corner of Morrison & Ninth St. August 3, 1889, aged 95 years 5 months & 3 days.

Buried in River View Cemetery, Lot 402, Sec. 15, 6th day August.

The Baron DeWolfe, who is one of the most intimate advisers of the Emperor Maximillian, was the head of the Prussian House of DeWolfe, grandson of Baron Frederick above mentioned, founded the Swedish house of DeWolfe; the great-great grandson of Joseph DeWolfe was an Admiral in the Dutch service and Captain General of the Dutch East Indies in 1751 and 1757.

In England, William DeWolfe appears as one of the witnesses in the transfers of estates after the battle of Hastings in 1066, Evidently he came over with the Normans.

The DeWolfes are still a noble family in England and Burke's Armory gives the DeWolfes a coat of arms.

The first notice of our ancestor, Balthayer DeWolfe, is found in the records of the particular of Conn. 1650-1662, and is not especially flattering.

On March 5, 1656, among the names of citizens against whom complaints were made for violating the law of "ye land" by "smoking in ye streets" is the name of Balthayer DeWolfe of Mattabesick (now Middletown, Conn.). On September 5, 1661, Nicholas and Margaret Jennings were indicted for practicing witchcraft and entertaining familiarity with Satan to "ye loss of several lives" in particular "ye wife of Roynold Martin" and "ye child of Balthayer DeWolfe".

We find in Mattabesick in 1656, in Saybrook in 1661, in Weathersfield 1664, probably a Mill-wright doing work in various places. The family home was in Saybrook where in 1668 he and his three sons, Edward, Simon and Stephen were members of the town militia or training band, and joined in a petition which as a Court record is preserved.

Balthayer was then about 45 years old and Edward, as appears from the tombstone still standing at Lyme, was born in 1646, and was 22 years old. Their autographs are in the English style and entirely unlike the Dutch or French writing of the time. There is no trace of anything continental about the names in the family. They are purely English. Balthayer, Alice, Edward, Simon, Stephen, Mary Susannah. Probably the name was originally Polish or Russian, since the name is common in these countries, and came first into Germany, then into Normandy, and afterwards into England with William the Conqueror. Balthayer was an Englishman, there is no doubt of that.

Edward DeWolfe, son of Balthayer, was a carpenter and millwright. He lived at a point now called Laysville about $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles from the center of the village of Lyme where he had his house, two saw mills and a grist mill. He was buried in the Duck River Burying Grounds at Lyme. The inscription reads: -

"Here lies ye body of Mr. Edward DeWolfe, who died March ye 24, 1712, in ye 66 year of his age".

His son lived in Middletown and was well-to-do, and an influential citizen. I have a copy of his will in which all of his children are mentioned. Without particularizing further I will fill in the intervening time by a pedigree list.

1. Balthayer DeWolfe, b. about 1623 was living 1695.
Alice (his wife) was still living in 1687.

Children of above:

 1. Edward b. 1646, d. 1712.
 2. Simon b. 1648 d. 1695
 3. Stephen b. 1650 (?) d. 1702
 4. Mary b. 1656 (?) m. Thomas Lee (1st)
m. Martin Griswold (2d)
(Was grandmother of Gov. Martin Griswold of Conn.)

5. Susannah b. --- m. Henry Champion (1st) and
m. John Huntley (2d).

6. Joseph. Estate administered in 1720.

2. Edward DeWolfe b. 1646, d. 1712
Rebecca his wife.

erty in Middletown, Glastonbury, and Lyme.

1. Simon b. 1671, died 1704.

2. Charles b. 1673, d. 1731.

3. Benjamin b. 1675, d. ---

4. Edward B --- d. ---

5. Stephen

3. Charles DeWolfe, b. 1672, d. 1731.

Prudence White, his wife, d. 1842 (?)

Children of the above:

1. Charles b. 1695, went to Guadaloupe, m. Margaret Pottu.
His son Charles b. 1718, returned from Guadaloupe and lived at his grandfather's house in Middletown. Residence in Guadaloupe had led to dropping the "W" sound from the name and it was D'olf, and tombstones there cover more than a hundred years of the family under that name.

2. Matthew lived at Boston, large family.

2. John 1704

4. Stephen

5. Simon

6. Prudence

7. Mary

8. Elizabeth

9. Rebacka

10. Joseph b. 1717 (killed in French & Indian War before Louisburg.)

4. Joseph DeWolfe, b. 1717 m. 1738, Mar. 8, Tabitha Johnson

Children of the above:

1. Prudence b. Oct. 24, 1739.

2. Margaret b. Nov. 16, 1741

3. Abda b. Oct. 25, 1749.

The children were born in Middletown. Charles, father of Joseph, left his widow a life interest in his Middletown home and at her death (or marriage) the property fell to Joseph and Simon, con-jointly. Joseph and Simon disposed of the property in 1742. The birth of Abda is recorded in the Middletown records, but his baptism is recorded under the name of Abdi, son of Joseph DeWolf, as taking place Nov. 5, 1743, nine days after his birth, and the records are found in the old Congregational Church at Bolton. It is in the handwriting of Parson White. My assumption is that the old man baptized his great grandson while in Middletown, and recorded the baptism in his own church at Bolton.

On the death of Joseph, Henry Johnson, uncle of Abda, was appointed his guardian Dec. 1757, and the name is spelled "Abdy" DeWolfe on the Court Records.

It was about this time when the feeling against wverything French was very high, that Abda and several of his cousins followed the lead of the Guadeloupe family and assumed the name of Dolph. There is reason to believe that several of them enlisted in the Continental contingent to the British Army.

From the records I get nothing further, but from the records which Abda himself kept, I find that Abda Dolph, son of Joseph Dolph and Tabitha Dolph, was born Oct. 25, 1743; that he married Mary Coleman, daughter of Nathaniel and Ruth Coleman, who was born March 4, 1745, d. March 17, 1766. This proves that he did not consider it a real change of name, the spelling had been only changed, as the name was pronounced, form Dolph or D'ulph.

Abda remained in Connecticut in Fairfield County, until about the time of the Revolution. Then he removed to Spencerport, Columbia County, N.Y., and remained there until about 1875 (?) when he removed to Hebron, Washington County, N.Y. Mary died Jan. 19, 1800. In 1832 Abda removed to Ashtabula County, Ohio, with his son George and he died Oct. 26, 1832, the day after his 90th birthday. He is buried in West Andover, Ohio.

Abda DeWolf (Dolph) Oct. 25, 1743. Oct. 26, 1833.
Mary Coleman (his wife) m. March 17, 1766.

Children of the above:

1. Joseph b. June 6, 1767. d. Dec. 21, 1827.
2. William b. March 13, 1769. Went south into Georgia.
3. Ruth b. April --1771; m. Benjamin Frisbee; 8 children, all dead.
4. Lydia b. Jan. --1774, m. B. Bond, 10 children, all dead.
5. Tabitha b. Dec. 15, 1777, m. Andrew Stephenson.

6. George b. June 28, 1780, m. Polly Chipman, 17 children
all dead.
7. Simon b. April 1, 1783, m. ---- 4 children, 1 living 20.
8. Apphia, b. July 14, 1790 m. Kane; 1 child (Mrs. Pringle)

Of the Dolphs descended from Malthayer DeWolf, there are the Saybrook Dolphs, of whom Charles Dolph captured the privateer Rover in the War of 1812, losing his life in the skirmish with the crew, and for which Congress in June 26, 1816, gave the widow a bounty of $500.00. Of this family Frederick W. Dolph lives at Essex, Conn. Another family of the Saybrook stock lives at Deep River, Conn.

Simon Dolph, b. April 1, 1783, d. 1815
Abigail Walker, his wife, d. 1810.

Children of the above:

1. Leonard, b. Aug. 23, 1805, m. 1825, d. Jan. 8, 1908.

Mr. John C. Dolph,
126 Liberty St. New York City.

My dear Cousin:

Your letter was received this morning and I will try to answer it as I may have an opportunity. I shall be obliged to do it a little at a time, if I give you anything of value, so you will kindly excuse me if I jot down on rough paper in pencil such items of information concerning the family history as may in the interval of a very busy life.

and father made to my father's home about 42 or 43 years ago. I was a small boy. I am not positive whether it was your father or Uncle Orson's son Isaac who accompanied your grandfather, but, now I think of it, it must have been your father's Cousin Isaac. Your uncle Orson wrote me that he thought that your grandfather was the youngest of Joseph Dolph's children. He is mistaken in that, Cyrus Dolph was born in 1803. Marthat Dolph was born in 1806, May in 1806 and my father, Chester Valentine, February 14, 1812. Amanda was the oldest, born June 20, 1795. She married Anthony Pierce, died Sept. 17, 1844.

During the past ten years I have been using some of my spare time in tracing the history of the Dolph family. I have had many searches of records made in the New England States and would have had many more if it could have been done without so much expense. But I had to call a halt in the work. I cannot afford it. I will give you some of the facts which I have obtained by these means.

The name DeWolfe, as you say, sounds French but it seems to have been very widely used as a surname. Among the Anglo Saxons we find Wulf, Beo Wulf, Anth Wulf, Ethel Wulf, and Eud Wulf as names of men of renown. The house of Goulph has the same origin, from the name of the animal. The Scandinavian form is Ulph.

In England, William DeWolfe appears as one of the witnesses in the transfer of estates after the battle of Hastings in 1066. Evidently, he came over with the Normans. The DeWolfes are still a noble family in England and Burke's Armory gives the DeWolfe's coat of arms.

In this County there are records of two Dutch DeWolfs, Abel DeWolfe to whom the authorities of Amsterdam gave a moving license in the Catskill Mountains in 1659 and Drick DeWolf to whom was granted in 1661 the exclusive right to make salt in the colony for seven years. Probably the latter had the more profitable business and Abel was later associated with Drick in the salt manufacture. These have no connection with our DeWolfe and probably went back to Holland as a law suit instituted by them was afterwards carried on by means of agents in Gravesend.

Some three or four years ago I received a letter from Mrs. R. A. Bridewell, who was then living in New Orleans and I was able to trace her family and put her in communication with several own cousins and a sister of her mother then living. She comes from another line no nearer than that her ancestors were cousins of Abda.

There are four or five different families of Dolphs in the country all descended from Charles DeWolfe of Middletown. There are also some Dolphs who are recent importations from Russian Poland. There is a tailor in New York, a Russian Dolph, and he looks very much like the Dolphs who have not been in Russia for a thousand years.

* * * * * (repetition)

The Columbian County Dolphs descended from Edward Dolph who settled at Lebanon Springs before the Revolution. These are scattered through the State of New York and the West.

The Pennsylvania Dolphs descended from Moses Dolph who came out of Conn. into Columbia~~n~~ County before the Revolution, was a sailor in that war, and went to Scranton, Pa., about the beginning of the present century. Descendants well scattered.

The Abda Dolph family (ours), J. H. Dolph, artist, who by the way would be pleased to receive a call from you at his studio at any time, is a grandson of George Dolph who went to Ohio. The directory will give you his address.

I would be glad to have you run up and visit us at some time.

Very truly yours/ cousin

John M. Dolph.

The first part of the book is devoted to a general introduction to the subject of the book. The author discusses the importance of the subject and the scope of the book. He also discusses the methodology of the book and the sources of information. The second part of the book is devoted to a detailed discussion of the subject. The author discusses the various aspects of the subject and the different theories and methods of research. The third part of the book is devoted to a discussion of the future of the subject and the author's conclusions.

The author's conclusions are that the subject is of great importance and that it is necessary to have a thorough knowledge of the subject in order to be able to deal with it properly.
He also concludes that the methodology of the book is sound and that the sources of information are reliable. The author's conclusions are based on a thorough study of the subject and on a careful analysis of the various theories and methods of research.

Back in England, about the Crusades time, a certain man took care of an estate where there were a great many oxen; he became known as a man who cared for oxen and they called him "Oxen"; later the name came to be called "Willoxen" and still later Willox and also Willcoxson; then Willcocks, and still further abbreviated to "Willcox". James Wilcox, Sr., of Avon, Conn. used to spell his name "Willcox", but in his time one "l" was dropped and James Wilcox, Jr. who came with his father to Ohio in 1833-4, always spelled it "Wilcox".

Note: William Wilcoxson and Margaret, his wife, came to America from England in the Ship PLANTER in 1635. (See History of Stratford, Conn.).

This was during the troublesome reign of King Charles I, A.D. 1625-49. Mediaeval History (Myers) tells us that he "came to the throne with all his father's lofty notions about the divine right of kings". He quarreled with Parliament and for eleven years (1629-40) England was ruled without any Parliament at all. "The high-handed and tyrannical proceedings of Charles and his agents were enforced by three iniquitous courts" --- and "often their decisions were unjust and arbitrary, their punishments harsh and cruel".

It is but reasonable to suppose that conditions of this nature led our ancestors to cross the ocean and make for themselves a new home. The stories of Bannockburn and Robin Hood which the boy William heard at his mother's knee, must have been interspersed with those of terror and bloodshed; as he grew to manhood he heard also of the fruitful fields and beautiful rivers of America, and as conditions grew worse and worse in England, it is little wonder that he and his wife, Margarte, with their little boys, decided to cross the water to a new home of freedom and security in the "New England".

In the HISTORY OF STRATFORD, CONN., there appears a list of the vessel "in which William Wilcoxson and several other families came to America" --- "The parties had brought certificates from the Minister of St. Albans, Herfordshire, and attestations from the Justice of the Peace according to the Lord's order."

William Wilcoxson, 34 yrs. was a Lynen weaver.

Jo. Wilcoxson, 2 yrs.

Margaret Wilcoxson, 24 yrs.

There is a plat in this book showing Wm. Wilcoxson's town lot, also a cut showing the pew of Wm. Wilcoxson's family in the Episcopal Church at Stratford, 1645.

The following appears just above a list of First Settlers of Stratford, including William Silcoxson: "Fortunately, however, for the world, whatever the sad or hopeful experiences through which they had previously passed, they came and through them the United States have been and are honored.

In CRESTS OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND:

The Wilcoxson Crest: "A lion's gamp, erect, bendy ar. & sa. in paw a fleur-de-lis or, encircled by a wreath of oak, ppf."

From MEMORIAL HISTORY OF HARTFORD COUNTY, CONN.

SIMSBURY.

About the year 1643 two young men, John Griffin and Michael Humphrey came to Windsor and engaged in the manufacture of tar and turpentine. One day a Massaco Indian "did wittingly kindle a fire" which consumed a large quantity of tar belonging to Griffin. For this the Indian was arrested and brought before the Court at Hartford and in default of payment of 500 fathom of wampum he was delivered over to Griffin "either to serve or to be shipped out or exchanged for neagers, as the case will justly beare". To escape this penalty the Indian gave Griffin a deed to Massaco (Simsbury). When this town was first laid out there were thirteen families. (Two of them Joshua Holcomb and Joseph Phelps).

On the 6th of August, 1675, (the Indians becoming so troublesome) the Council "ordered the several towns to keep scouting parties of mounted men on the roads between town and town for the prevention of danger to travellers" and "that Windsor each other day shall send four men to clear the roads to Simsbury". Soon after that the soldiers who had been at the garrison for protection, were released and the people given a week's time "to secure themselves and their corn". -----

"then came the rush for dear life. There was no bridge or ferry across the river where teams could cross or cart path through the forest. All the goods must be packed upon their backs". --- "Whole bands of women and children hastened along, the men in the rear with sheep and cattle and such other utensils as their flight would permit." They had "hid their treasures in swamps and bushes". In about a week they came back to see what the Indians had done and found the town in ashes, every building burned.

This was the time of the King Philip War.

AVON (1830)

(Previously north parish of Farmington and called Northington contracted from North Farmington.) Bounded, North by Canton and Simsbury. East by Talcott Mountain Range. South and West by Farmington. The Farmington River flows twice through the town.

The northeastern part of this town is remarkable for the beauty of its scenery. Here is the highest range of that "trap" formation which intersects the state from north to south, and on its highest point and within the boundary of Avon which follows the top of the ridge for five miles, stands the observatory known as Barrett's Tower, built 1867, a short distance from the site of the towers erected by Daniel Wadsworth in 1810 and 1840 and which were destroyed, one by wind and the other by fire. (There is a picture in this book of the first tower, the one Aunt Jane used to talk about) Note: "Aunt Jane" was James Wilcox's sister.

In May 1746 Daniel Wilcox and five others petitioned the General Assembly that they "lived in the northern part of Farmington near the boundary line of Simsbury and that they attended worship in Simsbury and wished to be annexed to that society so that they might pay their taxes where they worshiped. This petition was granted, in 1750 and a church built; a new one was built on its site in 1818, West Avon. (There is a picture of this Congregational Church in the book, and it is the same church Amos Wilcox saw on his visit there).

The town of Avon contains 33 square miles.

Simsbury was named from Simon Wolcott. There was a garrison at Simbbury in the King Philip War. Simsbury burned by Indians in Philip War, 26 March 1676, Sabbath Day, after the inhaitants had fled. Capt. Allyn prominent in Simsbury after this.

The records of the first ten years after Simsbury was organize from 1680 June have never been found (?). 1786 Simsbury was divided, the northern half Granby; also 1806 when West Simsbury was called Canton.

MISS TALCOTT'S CHAPTER IN MEMORIAL HISTORY OF HARTFORD CO.

Pg. 83. From Simsbury two companies under Capt. Amos Wilcox and Zachariah Gillet, were organized immediately after the firing on Lexington, "the shot heard round the world".

Copper mines in Simsbury were used as prison.

(In a very old time stained record of Avon and Simsbury at Historical Rooms, Cleveland, there is a letter from Genl. Washington to the Prison at Simsbury which should be copied in our record).

Medical History of Hartford County (Memorial Hist. of Hartford County); by W.M.A. Wainwright, M.D.

"The history of medicine in the Connecticut colony for a hundred years after its first settlement is meagre enough. During this period very few regularly graduated practitioners of the old country appeared to have been attracted by the "opening" offered to them in the new. Judd in his history of Hadley, Mass. says that from the year 1667 to 1730 there was no physician or surgeon in Northampton "which was a large and rich town". Obstetrics was entirely in the hands of midwives.

THE HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES

The history of the United States is a story of growth and change. It begins with the first settlers who came to the Americas in search of a new life. They found a land of opportunity, but also one of hardship. The early years were marked by struggle and sacrifice, as the settlers fought to establish a new society in a remote and often hostile environment. Over time, the United States grew from a small colony into a powerful nation, shaped by the dreams and aspirations of its people.

The story of the United States is one of resilience and innovation. It is a story of a people who have overcome countless challenges and built a nation that stands as a beacon of hope and freedom. The United States has been shaped by the contributions of many different groups of people, each bringing their own unique talents and perspectives to the table. Together, they have created a nation that is truly exceptional.

The United States is a land of great diversity and opportunity. It is a place where people from all over the world can find a better life. The United States is a place where the American Dream is still alive and well. It is a place where the future is bright and full of promise.

The United States is a land of great beauty and wonder. It is a place where the sun shines brightly and the water flows freely. The United States is a place where the spirit of adventure is alive and well. It is a place where the possibilities are endless.

The United States is a land of great strength and courage. It is a place where the people have shown time and time again that they are capable of great things. The United States is a place where the values of freedom, justice, and equality are held dear. It is a place where the future is bright and full of promise.

SKETCH OF THE LIFE OF JAMES WILCOX, Jr. by his younger son, Amos Allyn Wilcox.

Cleveland, Ohio.

For many years I have had it in my heart to write a story of my father's life, and on this Sunday, December 10, 1905, I begin the work to the end that knowledge of his virtues may be known to coming generations. I feel myself wholly incompetent to do this and wish I were endowed with an inspiration that would enable me to do him justice. The influence of his life is ever with me; his discourses in the home or while driving the team afield are in my memory as a source of constant helpfulness; he practiced what he preached. I never knew him to use a profane expletive or approach in the slightest degree prevarication. His daily life was an open book. He understood more fully the teachings of Christ than any man I have ever known. "His life was gentle; and the elements so mixt in him that Nature might stand up and say to all the world 'This is a man'."

James Wilcox, Jr., son of James, Sr., and Hepsibah Humphrey Wilcox, was born at Avon, Connecticut, June 15, 1807. His mother died in his infancy. My knowledge of father's early life is meager. He was not much given to speaking of his boyhood; I think because there was little of joy in it. His father was a hard-working man, owning a home and a few acres of land. After the death of his wife, my grandfather married Ruth Harrington, probably of Simsbury, Conn. He was a man of fine sensibilities, of great respectability and of good standing in his community. From a letter which I have written by him in 1833, I am impressed with his superior penmanship and literary ability. The letter was advising his son (my father) in Windsor concerning the disposition of property in Connecticut and the purchase of land in Ohio. At that particular period in the development of America, people were in great numbers taking advantage of the grant of the Western Reserve to a Connecticut Land Company. Judging by the ancestry of this section people must have come from there and settled like a flock of birds.

As was the custom in those days my father worked at home until of age. Then he hired to a canal contractor and builder and worked for this man for eleven dollars a month and board. At the end of six months he had saved Fifty Dollars, a fine example of industry and frugality. With this as a nucleus, he engaged in the retail clock business. The Hartford Clock Co. of Hartford, Conn. had heard of him as a young man of excellent character and outfitted him with a wagon load of clocks sending him out as a canvasser. He made a trip into the interior of Vermont. At the end of a month he returned to his employers not having sold a single clock and expecting this failure would end his engagement with them. But their faith in him remained unshaken and they encouraged him by saying "We believe it has been conditions and not the man". They immediately arranged for him to go to the Southern States to establish the business there. This he did with signal success. At the end of a year he had a number of men in his employ and was buying clocks on his own account and doing an independent and paying business. By the end of four years he had accumulated a considerable amount of money - over $3000.00. Then he came to Ohio, bought a tract of land in Windsor and returned to Connecticut to remove his father's family thither, never to return. I have always thought the location in Windsor a most unfortunate one. Here he began his life in the wilderness.

He lived a life independent in thought and action. He was like a sturdy oak that we see growing in barren soil, towering far above the scrubby underbrush to which his neighbors might be likened. He garnered wisdom from sources unfamiliar to them. He had the experience and broadening influence of travel; he had his reading; and his wonderful memory, and the faculty of absorbing all that was best in literature. The chance meeting with an intelligent wayfarer who sometimes journeyed within his gates, bringing him news from afar, was a source of pleasure and profit. I have known him to sit by the fire with some grizzled philosopher far into the night. He stood almost alone as an abolitionist and predicted the Civil War as an unavoidable result of conditions which he had, with his own eyes, beheld in the southern states. On account of his anti-slavery sentiments he never held a public office in Ohio. I remember a neighbor returning from a political caucus saying to him, "You would have had the nomination, Mr. Wilcox, if you hadn't been an abolitionist - they were afraid you wouldn't be elected on that account."

In 1833 he married Marilla (Curtis) Smith, he twenty-eight years old and she twenty-four. They lived first in a log house on his place and within a few years the finest house in Windsor, and gradually added to his realty holdings until he had acquired 450 acres of land. He was an extensive sheep raiser for those days, owning over 400 at a time.

He and mother joined the Methodist Episcopal Church at Windsor Center and 20 years later at Windsor Corners, and in that Church he was the principal support financially and spiritually for the rest of his life. He taught the Sunday School for many years, was also a class leader. I have heard him address large audiences, speaking extemporaneously with a freedom of expression that held the closest attention of his audience. Had he been trained in early life for the ministry I believe he would have been one of the great preachers of the world. He followed the old-time custom of having family prayers twice a day. His voice was so loud and clear that I have often heard him singing in the church at South Windsor where he sometimes went of an evening and which was three-quarters of a mile away.

Some conception of the immense amount of work he did can be had from the fact that he and my brother, Nathan, took care of all of this land, tilled it, raised and harvested the crops with the assistance I was able to give. My father used often to say when leaving me with a task, "Now don't work too hard."

About 1853 he became a member of what was known as the Farmers' Store Company, and these stores were established by the farmers all over the country under the co-operative plan of management, this plan being for each farmer to be a partner in the business, the object being to get goods at wholesale prices. Central stores were established and clerks hired to manage them. They proved a failure everywhere on account of mismanagement and the peculations of clerks. At the Windsor store large quantities of goods were sold to irresponsible persons on credit, money was stolen; there was injudicious purchase made for goods for which there was no demand; with the result that at the end of two years the business was overwhelmed in debt. Father's original subscription was but $100.00, but by subscribing this amount he unwittingly became a partner and responsible for the debts of the concern. This incident in his life would have no special significance only as illustrating his sense of honor. All but three of the other subscribers repudiated their responsibility, taking advantage of the Bankrupt Act, placing their property out of their hands or swearing they had no more in their possession than the law would allow. Father, with the other two honest men, paid all of the debts of this concern which took all the money they could earn for seven years. I remember distinctly the night when father returned from a business meeting, saying the last $100.00 had been paid and he was free. This venture nearly cost him his farm and through this period the whole family suffered pinching poverty that a debt of honor might be paid. His loss was $1500.00. This seems a small amount in these days of quick acquisition of money, but then it was a vast amount and meant unremitting struggle to wring it penny by penny from an unwilling soil. This no doubt changed the desity of the whole family, as it took the money needed to educate his children.

About 1874 he was seriously injured by falling from a scaffold in the barn at threshing time. He was picked up for dead. This may have hastened his death. He died about two years afterward at the age of sixty-nine. I have often heard father say, "Hard work never hurt any one, but I believe he depleted his nerve force for the resistance of disease by over work, for, with his splendid physique, his temperance, the simplicity of his life, and his wonderful natural vitality, he should have reached the 100-year mark.

To review his life: My father was an obedient man in whom his father had great confidence. He was exceedingly orderly and care-taking. I never heard him speak of being punished at home and he never punished me, but he relat@d the incident of a severe whipping at the hands of a district shhool master who was an ignorant brutal character, wholly unfitted for his work. An evidence of his superior mentality is the fact that brought up without the influence of a mother's guiding hand, without competent teachers, and with little schooling, his education was unusually broad. His geographical knowledge was extensive and accurate; he was in touch with political events past and present, and his historical knowledge was very great. I have seldom listened to so entertaining a reader, nor one who absorbed and digested facts so easily. His habit of reading aloud to the family, interspersed with comments, was a source of great pleasure and far-reaching influence. He read with fine expression, moved to laughter or to tears by the emotion of his author's characters, often rereading paragraphs to fix them in his memory; he lived calmly and philosophically and when he knew his dissolution was approaching wrote his will without the aid of a lawyer or other help, in correct legal phraseology, a perfect document, making just distribution of his property. Lying on his death bed he summed up the teaching of his life in a feeling talk with me. He had lived justly, loved mercy, and walked humbly with his God. His physical resistance was so great that he lived for five weeks without food in a passive mental state, only saying sometimes, "I long to be gone."

SKETCH OF THE LIFE OF "OUR MOTHER", by her son, AMOS ALLYN WILCOX

Cleveland, Dec. 15, 1909

MARILLA (SMITH) WILCOX, born Dec. 6, 1811,; died Feb. 11, 1877.

Away back somewhere in the past there is an old house standing on a hill, and beyond a valley the woods, surrounded with orchards fragrant with blossoms, and down at the end of a little lane great clusters of roses growing in wild profusion, and a little girl and a little boy with their mother gathering these roses. This is my first vivid recollection of my mother. We went fishing, and again wandering by a murmuring brook at the back of the farm, dropping the hook in the water for fish and mother taking childish delight in the catches I made; now I see the over-spreading peach trees and hear the birds and the bees and smell the fragrance of the meadows; the old house is surrounded with orchards; there are beautiful wooded hills, and a valley, and a flowing brook having its life in cool springs hidden among the rocks overshadowed by beeches and willows that dip their branches in the water. And thus the sweet accord of our lives began.

I never got too big to hug and kiss her. We were always chums; nearly always the last ones up at night, in winter sitting for hours by a blazing fire in the great old-fashioned fireplace, she telling stories of the past, and I building air-castles for the future. As long as I sat up she would not leave me, so, perforce, I would go to bed first. This might be hours after the rest were soundly sleeping. Onenight I found her in the darkness, sitting by the window in the "west room". I crept to her side and putting my arms around her said, "Mother, what are you doing here"? "I am thinking about some poor family", she replied. "See", she said, pointing toward the northwest, and I beheld the sky lurid with a midnight conflagration. "Yes", she said, "Some poor family are homeless tonight". I have related this incident to show the infinite sympathy of her nature.

Once when a young man I stopped at a hotel in Hartsgrove. It was cold winter weather. As I sat in the office I saw a fellow guest sitting on the other side of the open fireplace with its great backlog, an old man of quite striking appearance. Naturally we drifted into conversation and without thought of its leading to mutual interest, gave our names. At hearing mine he awoke with sudden interest and said "Was your mother's name Marilla Smith"? "Yes", I replied, "Why do you ask"? "Because", said he, "I introduced your father and mother". Then I asked him to tell me about my mother. "Your mother", said he, "was the most beautiful girl in Windsor, and for that matter in the whole country around, and the most graceful dancer. She was the life and delight of all social gatherings with her wit, her rippling laughter, her spritely manners and her charming grace." This man's name was Norris. I do not recall his given name, but remember, however, that he was a retired minister.

But all that abounding health and gaiety was crushed and forever lost in the dreadful moil and toil and utter desolation of pioneer life on a farm. She was the "Martha" who served. When at the "quarterly meeting" our house would fill up with visiting "brethren" from Middlefield and Mesopotamia, it was my mother who stayed at home to prepare the dinner; my mother who served it, and she who "did up the work". Wouldn't I like to be there now? Wouldn't I? And taking my poor, tired mother in my arms go back to the woods where we were free and happy? And we were free and happy there. My mother was a poet, though she never penned her inspirations.

But there came a day when I saw her poor, still, cold hands, and I said "Dear hands, so swift to do for others, you will never work for us again, your work is forever done".

Her life was a tragedy of heroism, of love and self-sacrifice. Hers was the ministering spirit, always gentle and untiring in its steadfast devotion to us.

And in all the years that have come and gone, her loving, patient life has been our benediction. In each of our hearts there is a tablet inscribed:

SACRED TO THE MEMORY OF OUR DEAR SWEET MOTHER
GOD BLESS HER FOREVER.

SKETCH OF THE LIFE OF DANIEL E. WILCOX, Half-brother of James Wilcox, Jr., by Amos Allyn Wilcox.

Daniel E. Wilcox was born in Avon, Conn., June 10, 1828. When a boy seven years old he left with his father's family for their far-away home in the wilderness of Ohio. This trip opened a new world to his wondering, childish eyes, and he often related in after years incidents of the long ride on the canal boat to Buffalo; thence by boat to Ashtabula and from there over the jolting roads to Windsor, Ohio, through the primeval forest. Here hard tasks awaited him. There was the woods to clear away and all the labor incident to building the pioneer's home. His life was extremely laborious, rising before sunrise in the morning and working until late at night. His only day of rest was on Sunday. I remember his telling that he carried his shoes in his hands for fear of soiling them until he came in sight of the little church four miles away where he attended Sunday School, when he would put them on.

At the age of _____ he married Elizabeth Tripp, daughter of Thomas Tripp, Sr., and they moved on to a farm that he bought in Mesopotamia, Ohio, the township next south of Windsor. This farm he conducted with moderate success.

At the breaking out of the Civil War he was fired with the patriotism that stirred the whole North. One day while sitting in the barn of a neighbor, one "Seam" Cox, he said to Dan, "I'll enlist if you will", and he replied, "Nuff said". That night they went to Mesopotamia Center and enlisted in the 105th Ohio Regiment. Two weeks later they were hurried to the front. As a soldier he did his duty faithfully, sleeping on the ground, waking sometimes in the morning in a puddle of water, long marching neath the scorching southern sun and enduring all the hardships of the "Boys in Blue". He was in the battle of Perryville, one of the decisive battles of the Civil War and distinguished himself by conduct most heroic. When his regiment was ordered to retreat he was so imbued with the idea that he could "whip" the whole rebel army, that when the rest of the regiment retreated, the command fell on unlistening ears and he was left facing the enemy alone in an open field where he continued single-handed to load and fire his musket as rapidly as he could, and only fell back to join his regiment when danger of capture became imminent. He was honorably discharged from the army and returned to his home on account of a severe illness from which the surgeons were doubtful whether he would ever recover.

In _____ he removed his family to Wisconsin and from there to Iowa. On account of a difference in religious belief he left his wife, agreeably to her, leaving her all of his property. He returned to Ohio and securing a divorce married Sarah Spears, a widow with two children, a son and daughter. She had been a playmate of his childhood.

From this time on his life was along the "cool, sequestered stream"; he reunited with the church and lived a most exemplary Christian life, honored and beloved by his friends and neighbors, for many years superintendent of the Sunday School at Windsor Mills, Ohio. Here he still lives at the age of eighty-one with his wife, Sarah. He draws a Soldier's Pension.

SKETCH OF THE LIFE OF NATHAN LEE WILCOX, OF JEFFERSON, OHIO, by his brother, Amos Allyn Wilcox, Cleveland, Ohio.

December 9, 1909.

Nathan Lee Wilcox was born in Windsor, Ohio, April 14, 1839, and was named by his father after Deacon Nathan and Lee Case. He was born in the log house which stood directly in front of the frame house afterward built by father. He has a sketch of this log house drawn from memory. This log house was of the most primitive type, having a puncheon floor. In those early days it was incumbent upon every child to begin to work almost as soon as he could run alone, and Nathan plowed with oxen when he was so small that he had to reach up to touch the plow handles. I do not believe he had a single holiday in his early childhood. He attended school at South Windsor and later a few terms in the Orwell Normal School where he prepared himself as a teacher. He taught one term in Harts Grove and another in Windsor. The year he was twenty-one he worked for father a whole year with but one holiday for one hundred and ten dollars. He was married when 23 years of age to Sarah Harriet Sweet. Father then presented him with fifty acres of land, a barn and house, where he lived about six or seven years and where his two children were born. He then engaged in the sewing machine business and moved to Jefferson where he has since lived.

His life has been one of unremitting toil. When a young man in Windsor he gave vocal lessons evenings and was for many years leader of the church choir at Jefferson. He was a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church from the age of thirteen. The only profane expletive ever uttered by him in his life was when once, as a child, under intense provocation, he said "darn it".

He is a man of wonderful self-control, meek and submissive to what he believes to be the will of God. His life has been governed by kindness and love. I believe had he lived at the time of Job he could have given that philosopher lessons in patience. The world has produced few men in the annals of human life possessed of as fine a spiritual nature as his. He has fought the good fight and kept the faith and henceforth there is laid up for him an everlasting crown of righteousness.

Years ago he wrote a poem, beautiful in its simplicity of style, descriptive of American life on the farm as it was in the early days.

(Note: This poem was first printed in the Ashtabula Sentinel, Jefferson, O. Sept. 2, 1897, and was reprinted in the Jefferson Gazette, April 19, 1913. A newspaper clipping of the reprint is pasted in the original manuscript. The verse is quite lengthy, but an interesting description of pioneer life.)

His children are graduates of the Jefferson schools; his daughter Cora is the wife of Dr. Howard Spencer of Gainesville, Florida, and his son Albert is a successful man and influential citizen of Ashtabula, Ohio, where he is engaged in the banking business. He is married and has a daughter.

SKETCH OF THE LIFE OF HARRIET ELEANOR (WILCOX) ALDERMAN
by her brother, Amos Allyn Wilcox, Cleveland, Ohio.

December 19, 1909.

Harriet Eleanor (Wilcox) Alderman was born in South Windsor, Ohio, July 8, 1842, being the eldest daughter of James, Jr. and Marilla (Smith) Wilcox. A strong, healthy baby, an active, romping child, until at the age of four years, she submitted, at the dictation of misguided parents, to the barberous medical fetich, vaccination from the arm of a neighbor, a man. This was a misfortune that followed her through life; she never recovered from its effects.

As a child she was mentally precocious, an omniverous reader of fine literary tastes. writing beautiful essays and poetry which were sometimes published. Her opportunities for education were meager. Her schooling was obtained in South Windsor under the tutelage of instructors some of whom were extremely incompetent, while others were far in advance of their time, teaching vocalization and music as it has never been taught since in the rural districts; on account of the Puritan idea brought from Connecticut, perhaps as the result of the "Connecticut Blue Laws" that pervaded the community, and especially father's interpretation of the Bible in regard to the rearing of children, the joys that commonly are the heritage of childhood were denied her; she was a fine musician, with an exquisite voice of clear, ringing tone. To her music was of the nature of religion. It filled her soul and life. I recall a verse of a poem she once composed:

"Oh, Music, Mighty Music, Thou art all of life to me.
There is not a heart but sometimes yields an answering note to The".

All her life she sang at her work and now at the age of sixty-sev sings and plays the piano well. She has an exceptionally sunny, happy disposition. "Nellie" as her friends affectionately call her was a very pretty girl with dark eyes and dark brown long, silky hair into which no thread of gray has yet found its way.

At the age of 22, at the old homestead, she was married to Olynthus Gregory, son of Sylvester Phelps Alderman of Hartsgrove, Ohio, a handsome, dashing young man, a brilliant conversationalist. He was a dentist by profession. The marriage proved an unhappy one they were divorced in 1867-8 and she with her two young children returned home from Michigan. While this saddened her life, it spiritualized it as suffering often does. She devoted her life unremittingly to the welfare of her children, filling their young lives with simple, wholesome joys. The younger, Stella, under the wise guidance has become a guiding star in the community in which she lives and has trained her own two sons with high ideals, their school work being most creditable. Claude is taking a course in Oberlin College, while Hallie, the younger, is in the Huntsburg High School. They are both fine musicians; the elder daughter, Eva, since the death of her husband, Roney, has graduated in an eastern college and is a teacher of physical culture of recognized ability. All of which goes to show that a mother's guiding hand has a far greater influence in molding the destiny of her children than that of a father who is generally absorbed in business cares.

There is no doubt that she is one of the finest needle women in the country. At this time she can do a fine work that few young women would attempt. She inherited this trait from away down the line. Her mother and her grandmother Curtis before her were skillful, ingenious and inventive.

SKETCH OF THE LIFE OF ELIZA JANE (WILCOX) LEE,
by her brother, Amos Allyn Wilcox, Cleveland, Ohio.

December 10, 1909.

Eliza Jane (Wilcox) Lee, youngest daughter of James, Jr. and Marilla (Smith) Wilcox, was born South Windsor, Ohio, June 15, 1849. She was the most quiet, dutiful, obedient child of the family, and was an exceptionally healthy girl with rosy cheeks, an indefatigable worker. She was father's favorite child, probably because always so obedient to his slightest wish. At the age of 16 father sent her to school in Orwell, but home ties were stronger than the desire for an education and one day she appeared at the doorway, to the surprise of the whole family, having walked home, a distance of eight miles. She never returned. After the death of their father and mother, she and her older sister, Eleanor, lived at the old homestead. At the age of 30 she was married to Seth Hall, a near neighbor, and lived on the farm adjoining her father's. Her husband died in South Windsor in 1897 and after three years of widowhood, she married Henry L. Lee of Kirtland, Ohio, where she lived two years; then they removed to the farm of her former husband and near the land left her from her father's estate, and where she now resides. She and her husband are in perfect religious accord and live most happily, attending church regularly at the Wesleyan Church in South Windsor, where she went as a girl. She never had any children.

She is exceedingly kind and thoughtful for the good of her family, her brothers and sisters, looking forward with expectant joy to the yearly FAMILY REUNION, usually alternating one year at her home and the next year at the home of her niece, Stella (Mrs.

H. T. Clark), Huntsburg, Ohio, the next town west of her. She delights in having her friends and family visit her and in receiving letters from the.

At her home is the old melodeon which her father bought for "Nellie" over fifty years ago.

(Written in pen below: "Henry H. Lee died at Windsor April 12, 1916, and was buried at Kirtland, O., by side of his first wife".)

REMINISCENCES OF AMOS ALLYN WILCOX, by his niece, Eva (Wilcox-Alderman) Roney, Cleveland, Ohio.

Nov. 16, 1909.

I consider my "Uncle Aime" one of the most wonderful characters I have ever know, and I am going to write the story of his life, as he has seemed to me, while he is yet alive. Were I to be neglectful of this duty until after his death, it might be years before I could do it, so great would be my grief.

Amos Allyn Wilcox, son of James, Jr. and Marilla (Smith) Wilcox, was born December 15, 1851, the youngest of four children.

My earliest recollection of Uncle Aime was when I as a child and he a young man (he is fourteen years older than I), used to play with us and tell stories and read to my little sister and me. He used to be the best story-teller we ever heard, and is yet. He was always gentle and kind and we used to think whatever Uncle Aime did or get us into was all right. I remember about our having a swing in the old "cow barn" and how he used to swing me till my feet touched the rafters overhead, about eight feet from the floor, and how when I swung back high over his head he would shout "Drop" and I would let go and come tumbling down and he would catch me. This was the most gleeful sport we had, but when mother found it out she put a stop to it. No doubt it looked dangerous to her, but I never once thought of being afraid, so great was my confidence. My dear mother was not very well and my father had gone away and left us before we could remember, so Uncle Aime was the only father we ever knew. And he used to take us riding whenever he got the chance. One time he took us to Jefferson, 25 miles away, to see 'Rill Holcomb and Bill Adams' folks, cousins of his, and we were gone several days; the time he took us to Middlefield I'll never forget, for I carry a mark on my eyebrow yet where he kissed me forgetting the lighted cigar in his mouth.

We used to sing a great deal in those days of an evening, the old songs, all of us together. Mother was a rare soprano and a good player on the melodian which her father had bought her when a girl if she could learn a piece with both hands in a week's time. We sing these old songs yet when we get together, sometimes with tears in our eyes.

When I was about six and Uncle a young man about twenty, he went away up to Jefferson and worked for Mr. Howells, editor of the Jefferson Gazette, and brother of W. D. Howells, the writer. Next to being a public speaker I have always thought Uncle should have continued in this business, for he has such a remarkably retentive memory and can quote pages and pages from Shakespeare and other poets and almost any passage from the Bible that might be referred to. A couple of years ago he quoted a beautiful poem to me and I asked him where he found it, and after thinking a minute said, "Why, it was in a paper I found on the train the time I went to Tidiout to learn the drug business". "And you have never seen it since"? "No", he replied, "I left it on the train". This refers to the business he engaged in on leaving Jefferson. It had been over thirty-five years.

Between trips away he always came home to see us and we would have the stories again and the old songs of which he was so tenderly fond. His favorites were "The Old Canoe", "The Church in the Valley", "Annie Laurie", and others.

Speaking of Uncle's smoking, I am going to confess something here in regard to my enjoyment of it which I have never told before.

In these early unsophisticated days I had never learned the harm of ~~it~~ and neither had he. He had started smoking when little more than a child on the advice of his physician that it would be good for his chronic sore throat. So, clandestinely, I used to go and bury my face in his overcoat which hung against the wall to absorb what I thought an exhilarating odor and to imagine what a link that seemed between us and the great world without and think what a fine, up-to-date man of affairs dear Uncle Aime was any way.

And he was always so good to help us about our school work. One time, just after I had the measles and had not started back to school, I was out in the "west meadow" lot dropping kernels of corn in the freshly plowed field while he made the holes with a hoe and covered them up, and he taught me that day how the 9's and 10's and 11's went in the multiplication table. I don't know what we would have done if it hadn't been for his and Ezra North's help for the schools were not very good then and I didn't go at all till I was eight years old and have always been glad, for when I did start I was soon ahead of others of my age and I believe children go to school too young anyway.

In the winter of 1877 he went into the drug business in Chagrín Falls and this he carried on with very good success for several years, and here he met Dr. Fuller, a dentist, and becoming interested in dentistry took that up as a profession and went west to Gardner, Illinois, to practice. He was there several years and the last time he came home from there on a visit I was about fourteen years old. This was after grandpa and grandma had died and Aunt Jane had married and gone away, so mother and we girls were living there alone. When he left I cried so bitterly that when he got as far as Cleveland and at night went for a walk out on the viaduct, he said he stopped to look down at the river below and could see my tear-stained face so vividly in the darkness that he made up his mind it was his duty rather to stay and help his sister Nellie educate her girls than to return west. So he came back to Windsor and we all got ready and one Thanksgiving Day (1879) when it was snowing hard and we had furniture on a sled accompanying us, we started for Cleveland, going by way of East Claridon and Painesville, for it was long before the days of the suburban to Middlefield which we like so much to take now when we go down to see my sister who with her family still lives in Huntsburg.

In Cleveland Uncle opened a dental office on Garden Street (now Central Avenue) where we had comfortable rooms adjoining. After the carpets were laid and things settled, sister and I one day took hold of hands, Uncle along, and went over to Sterling School nearby. (I think Uncle had planned to get us near a school.) He left us at the gateway and we went boldly up the steps not realizing all it meant and the future it would so much change and better for us. We came home at noon with glowing accounts, as we were on tiptoe with delight at everything. The Piper sisters, one of them the principal, were so good to us. Our minds were as fresh for the work as an untilled field and we were as putty in thier hands for the molding. We studied hard; I'll never forget how hard sister studied, - mathematics seemed hard for her then, but she irresistably conquered, graduating two years later the head of her class and with the highest mark in grammar of any pupil in Cleveland. Her/remarkable success as a teacher later on in Ashtabula County was no doubt due to her sympathy for the ones that had to work hard. I being older finished Sterling the June after entering and went to Central High School in the Fall where for a year and a half I enjoyed every minute of it except one day when I had to speak a piece and my name beginning with "A" was the first to be called on. I was so scared I with difficulty kept my breath till I got through.

In the Spring following going to Cleveland Uncle, having little business in the first location and being ever resourceful, went over to Euclid Station and bought a drug store where we again had rooms in connection. He did fairly well here and we took rooms over in the Harkness Block and later Uncle traded this store for a larger one at the northwest corner of Euclid and Willson and opposite where we lived.

In the meantime Uncle Aime's health was poor. When a child of four he had been vaccinated and never in his life after that was well. He developed a serious illness, but, getting better, went back to the store. Going down a second time he and mother decided to give up, sell the store and return to Windsor in the hope of regaining his health. He stayed but a few weeks, however, and returned to Cleveland taking up again the dental business at which he continued for years. But the object of staying in Cleveland had been accomplished: The girls were on their feet having passed the teachers' examinations in the Spring and taken their first schools soon after. Then we did not have Uncle so much for a while.

July 10, 1880, he married Sarah Anne Compton, daughter of Charles and Amanda (Coddington) Compton, of Doan St., an exceptionally fine, strong-looking young woman and teacher in the public schools. Her mother being a paralytic at the time, they lived in her home where they have continued to live ever since, although the patient mother has long since been dead. Their only son, Stanley Compton Wilcox, born March 3, 1889, is now a big handsome fellow in Case School of Applied Science and on the foot ball team. He is a good dresser and certainly does know how to get slips of paper from his father that are good at the bank. The pendulum does swing. Uncle Aime did not have much when he was a boy; Stanley has everything.

Now, to connect a portion of the past with the present: While in Illinois, Uncle made a discovery in dentistry which, after a number of years, he perfected, and his Dental Cement and other products of his invention have been sold all over the world. In fact, he always seems on a new invention, often getting up in the night to experiment. He sold his dental office in The Arcade in 1898 and these inventions and the manufacture and sale of same have occupied his time ever since. This work has brought him in touch with the dentists all over the country, the demonstrations taking him to Dental conventions here and in Canada as well, while his speeches on scientific dentistry have been published in the leading Journals of the country.

Before finishing my story, I wish to say more of Uncle's refined, spiritual mind. He is a good Bible student, it being practically impossible to catch him on a point in question; in argument he is clear, firm and convincing, giving up generously when wrong and never trying to cover a point in his opponent's favor, accepting things just as they are, not on authority. He is easily swayed by close friends and takes up quickly things which appeal to him as right; he has about the greatest sense of humor or anyone I have ever met. I have remarked what a good story teller he is. He will certainly get the most out of a story with vivid side lights and all my sister's boys say they would rather hear him tell a story than anyone they ever knew. Although quite boys now, they still huddle around him when he talks. One little experience he told amused them much. It began:

"I never knew retribution to follow so close on the heels of evil doing as in the case of a dog over on Cedar Avenue one day. He was a little, barking whiffet (and Uncle's facial expression always goes with his words), snapping around at everything and everybody. He got hold of the back of my trousers and pulled away and then ran and tackled a man ahead of me who kicked him out in the street; this surprised him and made him so mad to think someone was trying to get even with him that he acted dazed for a minute and then started for the sidewalk, when a milk wagon came along and ran over him. He rolled over and over and another man he had snapped at threw a stone at him knocking him under a passing street car, and this finished him and I was glad of it".

Uncle is a great magazine reader and so is his wife. They have practically every one printed and every newspaper in the city finds its way daily into their home, while the very best books are in their library. He used to have such books with him when he came home as Ignatious Donnelly's and Owen Meredith's "Lucile" and we girls used to read them during the few hours he was there; he is very fond of his close friends and has the greatest reverence for his father's and mother's memory. They were buried in Windsor years ago but on every possible occasion he still visits their graves. He was in Chagrin Falls when sent for at the time of his mother's last illness and her death seemed nearly to kill him. He used to say, "Oh for the touch of a vanished hand and the sound of a voice that is still". He often speaks of his father and quotes his words and in October of this year went to Avon, Connecticut, to visit for the first time his boyhood home and has written a beautiful description of it. His father in life, however, seemed not quite to understand him, but it was simply Uncle's restless desire to do and to be, to see and to know. He did not care for the farm; on one occasion he threw four hundred sheep in the water to be washed and it made him sick all summer. I remember him saying one time that some people do not seem to get along together, no matter how well-intentioned each may be. He said in taking off a load of rails, for instance, he and his father would be sure to get hold of the ends of different rails, while his brother Nathan and father would invariably get hold of the same rail. His fondness for his sisters, Nellie and Jane, has remained unswerving through all of the years. He and Nellie, especially, have always understood and helped each other. He never forgets how good she was to him when he was a little sick boy.

Uncle has an unusually large vocabulary of useful words, - he simply instinctively slips the right word into the right place. An odd little trait he has is of telling us something and leaving us all roaring and almost immediately picking up a book or paper, will "hunch" down in his chair and be completely absorbed in a new subject. If we then speak to him he will look around in surprise, his eyes stretched wide (a family trait) showing what a wide bridge of thought has been thrown between us and him. We have been left behind, so to speak, while he has jumped on a train and sped away. This is his great power of concentration. I have often noticed that he will work for hours on some intricate device, leave it and come down and sit at the piano and finger the keys to "Annie Laurie" as if there was nothing else in the world to be done; then will go to a book and be completely absorbed, perhaps in an article on the political or social conditions of the country, as to be entirely oblivious to his surroundings, not noticing conversation or even an unusual occurrence in the room, while we know he will remember what he is reading ten years from now. This faculty saves him, for he wears out more energy thinking than most people do working.

Though not much of a church-worker, he lives nearer what a real Christian's life should be than anyone, I believe, I ever knew. Charles Sheldon has a book, "If Christ should come to Chicago". If Christ were on earth and for some purpose wished to work unobserved and yet mingle with the world and carry on business with his fellow men, it might be quite possible he were incarnate in just such a man as Uncle Aime. He is fair and just and generous to a fault. "Although a member of the Christian Church and gives liberally to its support, I have always thought the church he liked best was the woods where he could love nature and think. Though not a wealthy man he is well to do. His wealth is greatest in mental accomplishments. He "owns the trees and the beauty of the landscape; Titter-bottom owns the dirt and the fences".

He loves to talk and dwell on the mysteries of this world, occult matters and eternity; is very tender-hearted of other people's troubles; could not collect in the Lightning Rod business years ago where unscrupulous agents had oversold their former customers; told one poor old woman he wouldn't pay for it if he were in her place.

Just a little anecdote more:

He went to Michigan one time to see his Aunt Jane, his father's sister. Her husband, Robbins Merritt, had family prayers and the next morning after he arrived he was awakened by the ascending lugubriousness of this prayer. He would tune his voice to the highest pitch and then without warning, drop instantly to a low tone like a voice from the tomb. He was a good, sincere man; it was simply an old-fashioned prayer. After Uncle had told about it, he broke out again: "I never heard such a prayer! My gracious, you have no conception of it! How the young folks must have tittered in church when he prayed'."

In appearance the Wilcoxes are all rather above medium height; dark eyes and hair and distictive features. Uncle Aime says they never, any of them, seem to know anything until they are over forty years old.

Uncle Aime and his older brother and two sisters are all alive and in fair health. My Uncle Nathan has been very good and kind to me; I write of Uncle Aime as his life has been so closely associated with mine.

I close with love and gratitude for his influence and helpfulness to me.

MY TRIP TO AVON
By Amos Allyn Wilcox

Cleveland, Ohio, Nov. 21, 1909.

In my early childhood and in my youth I often listened to my father as he related incidents of his childhood, his home and its surroundings. He would speak of a mountain, of a beautiful river, of a great rock where he played and on which he sat. I remember his saying one day when tired "I would like to sit again in the niche of the rock where I sat in childhood", and I wondered if I should ever see those places. The desire to visit his old home grew upon me and at last the wish was consummated.

In October, 1909, accompanied by my good wife, we made our way to New Haven, and thence by rail to Avon, Connecticut, which we reached late in the evening. Walking north three-quarters of a mile from Avon in the glow of the setting sun, my wife suddenly paused and pointing to a great rock by the side of the road said, "There's your rock". "Yes", I replied, "That must be it". Standing solitary and alone as though dropped from the heavens, it is the most majestic and monumental rock I have ever seen. It is 60 feet in circumference and 14 feet high. Standing near it on the same side of the road was a house where we stopped to make inquiry. I found to my surprise that the name of the family was "Case", a nephew of one Lee Case who was my father's boyhood chum. Mrs. Case treated us most graciously. She is one of the most charming ladies I ever met. She invited us to stay over night, which we gladly did. They told us much of interest in our family history. There are three parcels of ground north of the rock which once belonged to the Wilcox family that to this day are known as the "Zeke, the Lige and the Jim lots". Without doubt this property descended to my great-grand-father, James, and his brothers from their father, whose given name we do not know. (Since learned to have been Amos). Directly across the road from the site of father's old home, still stands, in a fine state of preservation, the residence of Deacon Case, founder of the Case family, of whom I heard oftener in my youth than any person on earth. He must have been my father's oracle. I believe he copied his life morally, socially and religiously. The house father built in Windsor, Ohio, is almost an exact reproduction of the Case homestead. A picture of this same Deacon Case hangs in the home of Edward Case, his nephew, where we stopped. As an example of this man's peculiar and remarkable notions as to the method of training children in the way they should go, I will relate this incident told me by my father:

When a little boy, he and Lee Case (of whom I have already spoken) were playing in the woodshed while the Deacon was chopping wood. They became somewhat boisterous in their childish but altogether innocent glee. Quietly laying down his axe, the Deacon said to Lee, "Come with me", and leading him to the barn gave him a sound threshing, evidently for no other reason than that the boy had been enjoying himself. The idea seemed in those days to have been that if we were happy we were wicked. Who would have believed that this trivial incident would have been told in song and story nearly a hundred years later. It is but just to say that from all accounts this system of training did produce a fine and exemplary citizen who died leaving an estate valued at one hundred thousand dollars.

In the evening Edward Case tried to tell us a story as told by his uncle, Lee Case, of "Zeke" Perkins and his nephew, my father, when they were selling clocks in North Carolina, but he laughed so in the telling of it that it was with difficulty we got the story - he laughed harder than any man I ever saw.

It seemed that while driving through the mountains they came to the home of a Cracker and put up for the night. They both slept in the same room on the ground floor, two beds in the same room. In the night my father was awakened by an imprecation and a screech. Looking across to the other bed he beheld in the moonlight, Zeke sitting up in bed and apparently choking the life out of the good "loidy" of the house and demanding what she wanted, he apparently being under the impression that she had entered their room to steal his pocketbook. Between chokes she explained that she had left her "nighty" in there. On finding that her mission was of so innocent a nature, he released his hold saying, "If that is your business, get your nightgown and get out".

This story has evidently been told through three generations and many people have gone to their graves cudgelling their brains as to what this woman's mission really was.

In the early morning I walked on up the road to the site of father's old home and found the barn still standing, but a new house has been built back of the old one which has been torn down. It is a most beautiful country road leading direct from Avon to Simsbury. Looking eastward I beheld the mountain so often spoken of by father and it is the most beautiful mountain I have ever seen. It rises like an embankment about a mile and a half distant, with the Farmington River flowing at its base. The skyline of its summit is almost as level as the ridge of a barn for a distance of five miles. As I beheld the sun rising in the east clothing the mountain in a purple mist, I said "No wonder father had an exalted, spiritual mind and a wonderful conception of the beauties of nature with such a setting for his childhood".

Returning to the town we saw the church where father went in his boyhood, twice each Sunday, listening to sermons three hours long. It is shaded by tall, majestic maples that are so large they must have stood there when father was young, and there are many houses that from the style of their architecture must be from one to two hundred years old. Back of the church is a small cemetery where my grandmother is buried.

We went to the beautiful old town of Simsbury which was burned by the Indians March 26, 1676. The destruction of this town was more complete than any ever destroyed by the Indians, all of the old records at that time being burned. In the cemetery here many of the Wilcox family are buried.

Note: Phelps Genealogy, Page 93, shows map of old Simsbury with location of farms; page 92, an account of "Solemn Meeting, May 24, 1683," to decide location of "Meeting House", "on which side of ye river", etc.

The original of the typewritten genealogy and family record of the Wilcox family was furnished by Mrs. Charles H. Edel, past regent of Firelands Chapter, Norwalk, Ohio. She is the "Doris" mentioned in the genealogy as the daughter of Albert Wilcox. Copied by Florence M. Perry, Ohio State Chairman of Colonial and Genealogical Records Committee. Credited to:

Mathematical Induction

Prerequisites

Students should have a solid understanding of algebra and logic.

Introduction to Mathematical Induction

Mathematical induction is a method of proving statements about natural numbers.

Base Case

Assume the statement is true for $n = 1$.

Inductive Step

Assume the statement is true for $n = k$.

Prove for $n = k + 1$.

Conclusion

The statement is true for all $n \in \mathbb{N}$.

Example 1

Prove that $1 + 2 + \dots + n = \frac{n(n+1)}{2}$.

Base Case: $n = 1$

Inductive Step: Assume true for $n = k$.

Prove for $n = k + 1$.

Conclusion

The statement is true for all $n \in \mathbb{N}$.

Example 2

Prove that $2^n > n$.

Base Case: $n = 1$

Inductive Step: Assume true for $n = k$.

Prove for $n = k + 1$.

Clipping from the Ashtabula (Ohio) Star Beacon, May 14, 1947

"A mystery was unsolved in Ashtabula today and there seemed little likelihood that it ever would be solved. It was a mystery more than 131 years old.

What Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Yoe, 5136 Gary Avenue, would like to know is: Who was Capt. Wayham Grant? and why was he apparently buried on what is now W. 52nd-st?

"They know some facts about him because they found his gravestone. But in 1815 when Capt. Grant died, Ashtabula had been settled only 14 years and would not be incorporated as a village for another 16.

"Township records show no cemetery in the 52nd-st - Gary-av. neighborhood where the gravestone was found. Rev. Charles Covell, rector of nearby St. Peter's Episcopal Church has heard no mention of a church cemetery, although St. Peter's was founded in 1816.

"The story started Monday evening when John Bates, plowing a garden for the Yoes, felt his plow strike a large stone. The garden plot is an acre between the J. H. Blakeslee home at 505 W. 52nd-st and the John Nejbauer home at 523 W. 52nd-st.

"Complete uncovering of the stone revealed it a large slab five by four feet and two inches thick. The Yoes dragged it home where Monday night rain washed off accumulated dirt and the gravestone's lettering stood out in relief:

In memory of Captain Wayham Grant
Who departed this life December 15, 1815, aged 41 years, an emigrant from Windsor, Con.
Ye mourning friends, dry up your tears,
Here I shall lie 'til Christ appears.

"Although a "captain" was normally an important person in Ashtabula's early days no mention of a Capt. Grant is made in historical records. And no burial plot ever known in the area where a gravestone was found.

"Ashtabula's newest - and oldest - mystery is likely to remain a mystery".

- - - - -

Copy of clipping from Ashtabula (Ohio) Star Beacon May 17, 1947:

Capt. Warham Grant, whose 131-year-old gravestone was turned up Monday by a garden plow, was the grandfather of Gen. Ulysses S. Grant, it was verified today. The mystery was cleared up this morning by W. C. Grant, 122 W. 45th-st. whose family history showed that Orson, son of Capt. Warham Grant had a brother Jesse R. who was the father of President Grant.

Previous to reading Star-Beacon accounts of the mysterious tombstone, W. C. Grant, founder of the Grant Specialty Co. of Ashtabula, had no idea where his great-grandfather, the captian, had been buried.

The gravestone was turned up Monday evening on a lot between 505 and 523 W. 52nd-st by John Bates, plowing a garden for Mr. and Mrs. Yoe, 5136 Gary-av.

Other descendants of Mathew Grant, first Grant to settle in America and father of Capt. Warham Grant, include Zupha Grant, who founded the first female seminary in this country; Hon. Theodore Burton, Jefferson; Gen Fred Grant, son of Ulysses; Oliver Ellsworth, one-time chief justice of the U. S. Supreme Court; Seth Hastings Grant, ex-comptroller of New York City, and Edward Marshall Grant, who wrote the Bulgarian Declaration of Independence.

W. C. Grant, whose family genealogy solved the mystery lives with his sister, Luella E. Nichols, great-granddaughter of the captain. Another descendant whose name appeared in the family history was Henry Grant of Conneaut.

The captain, who died in 1815, moved to Ashtabula County from Windsor, Conn. about 1809-10. Before that, he and his family had moved to Montreal, Canada, and then returned to Windsor about 1805. In the war of 1812 he was an Army captain.

The "Grant Family National Assn." once held regular meetings, one being in Cleveland in 1901, at which time Maj-Gen. Fred Grant was presiding officer, and W. C. Grant of Ashtabula was second vice-president. Another meeting was held in New York in 1907, and others were held later - one at Ulysses Grant's homestead at Point Pleasant, Ohio. That affair was so private that the then President of the U. S., Theodore Roosevelt, was not invited.
